Foreign Intelligence.

DUBLIN, August 18.

THE moisture of our atmosphere for a few days past should not be wondered at; it appears to have been general all over Europe. Almost every packet brings an account of the damages sustained in Gr. Britain and the Continent, by thunder and hail-storms, accompanied by rains. The fruits of the earth in several places have been destroyed, and many lives lost. On the 13th ult. a violent storm, attended with hail, burst on a sudden on several parishes in the country of Chartrain, in France, where it was so powerful, that in less than a quarter of an hour, all the lands were covered with hail-stones to the depth of near a foot. The glazing of most of the houses was broken, the roofs stripped of their tilings, a great number of men and cattle grievously wounded, and birds of all kinds killed. All the grain, whose appearance promised an abundant harvest, was cut off, and carried away by the torrent: the hail-stones were of an angular form, and generally as big as a hen's egg; but a greater number of them were equal in size to that of a man's fist.

LONDON, August 14.

It is pretended by some men, who are not very wise, that the present difficulties of the Dutch are the merited unhappy consequences of their treachery to the English, but in fact they are occasioned by our great folly and great injustice to that nation which had certainly the clearest right to consult their own interest, as a commercial people, and not to be governed by the mad and ruinous politics which then directed this nation and distracted America.

The business of St. Eustatius was little short of a national robbery that would have disgraced the states of Barbary. The Dutch resented the plundering system of the English which they will never forgive, and wisely (as any other nation would have done, under the same circumstances) declined being any longer in alliance with a country capable of plundering them, and as wisely resented the conduct of their captain-general, who, against the interest of his employers, supported the measures of the nation that so harshly used them. Hence the cause of disgust and the resentment against the stadtholder! And as that cause is unpardonable, from the loss it has occasioned to the Dutch, it is unreasonable to suppose they will any longer continue such an authority against their inclinations and interests, and against the policy of their new and great ally, the king of France, who will never be able to enjoy the happy effects of the Dutch alliance, while the powers of the stadtholder exists friendly to the interest of Great-Britain.

It manifestly appears that there is great reason and justice on the side of the creative power of the republic, and very little to be said in favor of the stadtholder, who seems to have acted a wrong part in regard to the republic, and an impolitic one with respect to himself. His deluded partizans, therefore, who take up arms and plunge them into the bowels of their country to support the cause of the captain general, will be in open rebellion against the state. It was folly in the princess of Orange, under such circumstances, to venture to the Hague, and it was quite as weak in the republic not to detain her and her children as hostages for the conduct of the stadtholder and his brother-in law.

Our public amusements are in a flourishing situation—and indeed well they may be, as they meet with the encouragement of the royal family, nobility, &c.

[To give Americans an idea of what is thus the object of royal protection, we have extracted the following lines from an opera song, much celebrated.

" Hey, for America I sail,
Yankee doodle deedle;
The sailor boys cry'd, " smoak his tail!"
Jemmy linkum feedle.
On English belles I turn'd my back.
Diddle, daddle, deedle;
And got a foreign Fair quite Black,
Oh twaddle, twaddle tweedle."]

Aug. 17. The emperor has intercepted a letter from France, which led to a discovery of a large number of fire-arms of French manufactory, which were on the road for the use of his dissatisfied subjects, which of course has given great umbrage.

There has been a prevailing opinion, for some days past, that the court of France does not seriously intend to support the Hollanders; and, that the French ministers have, from time to time, given to our court the most positive assurances of such their pacific disposition. If France has really made such assurances, she has acted in a very disreputable manner, to either the Dutch or the English. No longer ago than the month of November 1785, France entered into a treaty of alliance with the Dutch, obliging herself to support them. The treaty itself is the best proof of the assertion. Let any person read the following articles, and then ask himself, whether France can, consistent with good faith, abandon the Dutch? If he says No; another question naturally follows, which is, What are we hesitating about? War is inevitable:—

III. The high-contracting powers will always act in concert to preserve peace, and which ever is threatened to be attacked, the other shall endeavour by its good offices, to prevent hostilities, and bring about a reconciliation.

IV. But if this interposition should not have its proper effect, they engage mutually to assist each other by sea or land. His most Christian Majesty engages, in such case, to furnish the states with 10,000 infantry, 2000 cavalry, 12 ships of the line, and 6 frigates. Should France be attacked, the states agree to assist her with 6 ships of the line, and 3 frigates; and shall either furnish 5000 infantry and 1000 cavalry, or allow a sum of money, to be stipulated in a separate article.

The King of Prussia has taken a decided part; his troops, are at this time on their march. The last mail brought accounts of the Hollanders having dismissed the Stadtholder from all his authorities, and confiscated the estates of his adherents. No measures can be stronger.

The dispute is, in every stage of it, an exact repetition of the circumstances which attended the beginning of the American war. France at that time made the strongest pacific assurances. Men even of ordinary penetration could not help smiling. Our ministers, however, were duped.

Precisely the same conduct France is now pursuing, only with less art; for the union between her and Holland was indispensably made with a hostile view to the Stadtholder. No assurances therefore that France can now make, can be friendly to both England and Holland; she must deceive one of them. But the treaty will shew the connexion with, and the engagement France is under to support her ally the Dutch.

This treaty was published at the Hague on the 25th of November, 1785. It is just worthy of notice, that four days after this treaty was signed, Sir James Harris, our ambassador at the Hague, presented a memorial to their High Mightinesses, expressing a desire of the King of Great Britain to enter into a new treaty with them. It does not appear what, or whether any answer was given to this memorial.

September 5.

In the history of France, there are repeated instances of fortitude in the King's officers to resist the royal commands, when they have been deemed to be impatible with the interest of the nation. So early as the reign of Louis the Eleventh, contemporary with our Edward the Fourth, A. D. 1470, John Romanus, the King's advocate, refused to give his consent to an edict, for setting aside the pragmatic sanction, which edict, was issued at the importunity of Pope Paul the IId. and the King promised that the parliament should ratify it. The advocate for his resistance was threatened to be turned out—upon which he nobly replied, that " the King had freely bestowed that office upon him, and he would discharge it faithfully, as long as the King thought fit to continue him in it, and should be ready to lay it down whenever it pleased his Majesty; but he would suffer all things, rather than do any thing against his conscience, or the King's honor, and the good of the Kingdom."—The advocate accordingly lost his place.

AUSTRIAN NETHERLANDS.

The deputies appointed by the states of Brabant, have published an account of their proceedings at Vienna, and of the interview they had with their sovereign.—This narrative it is not important to translate, as nothing occurred of consequence.—The emperor " from time to time glanced at the deputies looks of sudden indignation."—The interview took place on the 15th instant.—The next day, the prince de Kaunitz, made known to them that the emperor had transmitted to the comte de Murray, the following paper of instructions.

" The Emperor and King,

Trusty and well beloved Comte de Murray, my Counsellor of State, Lieutenant-General of my Armies, General Commandant, and my Lieutenant-General, and Captain General, ad interim of the Low Countries.

YOU will find by the narrative annexed, in what terms I explained myself to the deputation from the states of my Belgic Provinces in the audience which I give them; and I send you this that you may know more particularly my intentions and pleasure on the subject of the indispensible preliminaries on which the narrative makes mention.

All the proceedings, more or less, of which the states, and a part of the people have been guilty, are notorious. Consequently it is impossible for me to yield to the sentiments of clemency which I am inclined to cherish, nor to the favorable dispositions which I manifested to the deputation of the states, until there shall not remain the smallest vestige of any part of what they have dared to commit in contempt of the sovereign authority since the first of April of this year.

To this effect it is necessary.

1. That in all the provinces of the Lower Countries every thing should be restored to the footing on which it stood before the first of April of this year.

2. The University and General Seminary of Louvaine, with all the persons employed and belonging to each, must be re-established in the condition in which they stood, or ought to have stood, on the said first of April; and it must be the same with the Seminary of Luxembourg.

3. The states of all the provinces must submit implicitly to the payment of the subsidies, both those that are in arrears, and those which are current.

4. The companies of burgesses, their military exercises, uniforms, cockades, and all other marks of party spirit, as well as all other illegal associations & meetings, shall be forthwith abolished, and in defect of troops, each magistrate shall take the most effectual measures for the support of the police and of good order.

5. The convents suppressed previous to the first of April last, shall remain suppressed forever, and the nominations that may have been made since that period to the vacant Abbey shall be null, and produce no effect in favor of the religious persons so appointed.

6. All the persons in office, whom they have presumed to displace, must be restored; with the exception of the intendants and members of the new tribunals of Justice. These two topics being of the number of those on which I am disposed to listen to my states, and to commune with them.

7. It is also indispensible, that all which regards the Chapters of Chanonpes, the religious fraternities, and all which respects the clergy as citizens and subjects of the states, and generally, that all things shall be restored to the condition, and be made instantly conformable to the ordinances existing at the above period.

In a word, there must not remain the smallest vestige of any thing committed contrary to my orders and intentions, and since first of April of this year.

My dignity renders all these preliminary re-establishments, absolutely indispensible. The assemblies of the states will perceive, I hope, the necessity, and I consequently flatter myself that every one of them will immediately and peaceably take place if possible.

But if it should happen, against all expectation, that any one shall dare to oppose the restitution, which must be complete and preliminary, I authorize you by these presents, to employ for this purpose, all the means of authority which I have confided in you, and which, but with much regret, though I find it to be necessary, I am obliged to augment as far as the occasion shall require.

As soon as you shall inform me that all the above preliminaries are fulfilled, and that every thing is restored to order, I shall be ready to concert with the assemblies of the states, or their deputies duly authorised, what will be the best in the several branches of administration without being contrary to the fundamental constitution of my Belgic provinces, or on the contrary, I shall find myself under the necessity, for the general good, to employ all the means which are abundantly in my power, and of which I do not desire to make use from the affection which I yet bear for my Belgic people, altho' they have in my eyes been highly criminal.

And in so far my trusty and well beloved, may God have you in his holy keeping.

JOSEPH.

Vienna, 16th August.

The emperor's answer to the deputies induced them to present a memorial to the prince de Kaunitz, the prime minister, against the preliminaries required by the emperor, in which, with a high and manly spirit, they contended for the privileges of their constitution. They lament that the new tribunals of justice, and the miserable intendancies, instead of being abolished, should yet be left as a matter for discussion. They complain that his majesty should require the payment of the subsidies without discussion, seeing that not being imposed with the consent of the assemblies of the states, they are in direct violation of the constitution. They conclude with the following manly animadversion on the latter part of the emperor's instructions to the comte de Murray.

" We are ignorant, my lord, that his majesty can employ the force which Divine Providence has put into his hands; but, can the goodness of his heart suffer him to employ means so contrary to the welfare of his subjects?—Can he deliver up his children to the destroying hand of military execution, and that for no other reason than that they remain attached to a constitution which securing the legitimate right of the sovereign, operates at the same time to the happiness of his people?—Can the paternal tenderness of his majesty permit him to destroy his faithful subjects, instead of governing them by their original and native laws, under which they have happily flourished for so many years? Can he reconcile means so destructive with the paternal dispositions which he hath deigned to manifest, and which their violable fidelity hath made him so proper?—That which his majesty thinks due to his insulted dignity will it be obtained, if to revenge himself, he shall deliver up to so many horrors his faithful subjects, who have ever been prodigal of treasure, and even of their blood, in defence, and for the glory of house.

" We presume therefore to supplicate your highness to condescend to employ in our favor your good will and high protection, and make known to his majesty our just apprehensions—to procure the revocation of the orders, some qualification of them, or at least to suspend the dispatch of the courier, that we may have time to give advice to our principals, to the end that with the zeal which always animates them, they may prepare the people for news so dismal, and strive to ward off the consequences, which, with the knowledge of those orders, we must apprehend." This memorial, however, had no effect——The dispatches were sent, and the preliminaries of the emperor being known, threw the whole country in an uproar. The volunteers, and the name may be applied to the whole of the provinces, refused to strike their cockades, and the states authorises their military meetings and exercises as before. What will be the result of all this, the emperor's paper of orders to the comte de Murray but too evidently indicates.

AMERICA.

KINGSTON, August 25.

We are informed a considerable quantity of gin has been seized by an officer of the customs, within this week, on board a vessel lately from Charleston. Without attempting on this occasion, to call in question the merit of the transaction, or having any wish to reflect on a revenue officer pursuing that line of conduct which he may think his duty points out, we cannot pass over the business without some comment.——It is confidently asserted that information of the gin being on board originated from the very spot where it was shipped, and that the letter containing the intelligence was brought by the very man whom it was intended to prejudice. The detection of some similar intent has in all probability, given rise to the reiterated complaints of the miscarriage of letters from America—the practice therefore is pregnant with every mischief. We dispute not the necessity of information, but think, nay hope, our customs cannot employ any person to furnish it in so unhandsome a manner; a mode, which, in its first principle, is a direct breach of confidence between man and man—It may tempt the master of a vessel to the violation of the trust reposed in him by the maltreatment of letters confided to his charge; and is indeed, a practice so utterly regugnant to every idea of common honesty, as should stamp the worthless spy that uses it with every mark of ignominy and contempt.

NASSAU, (N. P.) Sept. 22.

In our paper of the 8th inst. mention was made of the Schooner Sarah, Brown, late master, having been seen bottom upwards a day or two after the late gale. A negro sailor, named Dick Williams, who was on board her at the time she overset, gave us the following information.—On Sunday evening, the 26th of last month, captain Brown came to an anchor within a reef, our informant thinks, near Guana-Key.—Monday morning it blew fresh; the gale increased as the day advanced; at 8 A. M. drove from the anchor out to sea; about 9 overset. Captain Brown and the crew, being in all four persons, got upon the bottom of the vessel. In less than two hours all but our informant lost their hold, and were drowned in his sight: he took hold of a boom, on which he floated about at the mercy of the winds and waves till Wednesday evening, when he was driven on shore among sharp pointed rocks on Guana-Key. Being nearly exhausted by hunger and fatigue, and much wounded by the rocks, he with difficulty extricated himself from the surf. Next morning he made a shift to crawl about to some prickly pear bushes, on the fruit of which and brackish water, he subsisted till Monday morning the 3d inst. when descrying a vessel beating up, he lashed together two cedar logs he found on the beach with palmetto leaves; on this raft he put out to sea, with a piece of board which he used as a paddle. The people on board the vessel observing the raft, steered towards it, and took up the poor fellow.—The vessel that took him up was the brig Friendship, Kidd, from this port for Exuma, from which island our informant arrived here on Friday last week.

Extract of a letter from Antigua, dated the 2d of September.

" We have had some severe weather in the West Indies—here not bad; but Guadaloupe, Martinque and Dominica have suffered considerably. A gentleman who called in here last night, in his way from Dominica to Trinidad, mentions, that every vessel in the harbour of Roseau was blown ashore or out to sea—the same at Guadaloupe—and that the whole sea from Martinique to Guadaloupe is strewed with wrecks and lumber.—Here we had some small craft damaged, but scarce worth mentioning."

BOSTON, October 23.

On Friday last, a committee of the two branches of the legislature, consisting of Dr. Tufts and Mr. Goodhue, on the part of the senate, and Dr. Holton, Mr. Parsons, and Dr. Jarvis, on the part of the house, appointed to consider that part of his excellency's communications which relate to the constitution proposed by the late convention of the states, laid their report before the honorable senate; who, after deliberating thereon, with becoming freedom, candour and good humour, agreed to the same, with some amendments, and sent it, on Saturday, down to the lower house for their concurrence. The substance of the resolutions of the senate, as we are informed, is, a recommendation to the several towns and districts, within this commonwealth, to elect delegates, not exceeding the numbers they are impowered respectively by law to send as representatives, for a state convention, to meet some time in the month of December.

To-morrow this great question will be debated by the honorable house of representatives.

We felicitate our readers on the harmony which at present subsists in our legislature, from which the clearest demonstrative evidence may be had that peace and perfect public tranquility is restored to this commonwealth.

The Medical Society of the county of Suffolk have, we hear, with a laudable attention to the lives and health of their fellow citizens, expressed their determination to discountenance in future, such pretenders in physic as may attempt to impose themselves on the public, without having been duly educated and instructed in the profession, in a unanimous resolution, that at least two years study under some reputable practitioner, a knowledge of natural philosophy, and the mathematics, together with a facility of translating the Greek and Latin languages, and a perfect acquaintance with the structure of the human body, obtained by a regular attendance on at least one course of anatomical lectures and demonstrations, be considered as qualifications indispensably necessary to candidates for practice in the healing art.

Mr. ALLEN,

I WAS a little surprised this morning by reading in your Gazette, the following information, viz. " A correspondent proposes, that the Federalists should be distinguished hereafter by the name of WASHINGTONIANS, and the Anti federalists by the name of SHAYITES, in every part of the United States."

Who this correspondent is, where he resides, or what is his occupation or character, is no part of my business to determine or enquire: but I think he exhibits to public view the most distinguishing parts of the true characteristics of the narrow hearted man and the peddling politician.

I am as firm a federalist, and as great an admirer of the proposed Federal Constitution, as he is; but I have not the most remote idea of stigmatizing my honest neighbour, who, for want of due consideration, the means of information, or, it may be, a capacity, does not see the propriety of what our SOLONS have proposed for our approbation.

My neighbour has the same right to the exercise of his judgment in this matter as I have; and no person, but an unmasked tyrant, would openly stigmatize him with the most approbrious character which language is capable of painting, for his exercising, or at least enjoying or possessing it: and I am heartily sorry to see so good a cause as the proposed constitution attempted to be supported by such unjust, ridiculous, impolitic means: for such observations can only serve to sink the author into contempt, and the proposed constitution into dispute, as far as it has any operation.

I expect you will publish this in your next, that the public may know there are admirers of the proposed federal constitution who are not such narrow, contracted, bigotted, and even moon-struck politicians.

LYCURGUS.

Boston, October 19.

NEW-YORK, October 27.

A letter from a gentleman in Franklin, to his friend in Winchester, says, " Since your departure from hence our political affairs wear a different face. Our assembly, by a special call from the governor and council, met the first instant: It was the largest ever met since our separation from the old state, and, I believe, composed of as good characters as could be collected in any state on the continent. The principal business laid before this assembly, by our governor, chiefly concerned the hostile behaviour of his Catholic Majesty's subjects in the Floridas and Louisiana, towards the good citizens of this state in particular, and the other western states in general. It appears by a number of creditable evidences and authentic papers, that many of our citizens have been deprived of their lives, liberties and properties, within the jurisdiction of the United States, by persons acting under authority of his Catholic Majesty's governments; and notwithstanding many remonstrances have been made by us, both to his Catholic Majesty's governors, and to Congress, to remove these grievances, they have remained deaf to our just demands.

" Our assembly, therefore, as the father of the people, have thought it their indispensible duty to put a stop to all further depredations: To this end both houses have passed a law, which provides for a body of troops to be immediately raised, to consist of 1500 men, who are to be enlisted as regular soldiers for three years. They are to be embodied in one legion, and commanded by brigadier general Outlaw, who will be joined by 500 men from the Cumberland settlements. This body of troops will be ready to march in November. Their arms, ammunition, &c. came from Charleston before the law was made to raise this corps."

POUGHKEEPSIE, Oct. 24.

On Wednesday the 17th inst. being the anniversary of a day ever to be remembered by every patriotic son of America, when our beloved Independence was cloathed with additional lustre by the surrender of an army of Britons under the command of general Burgoyne, and the capitulation of another under the command of lord Cornwallis, a few patriotic sons of freedom, whose bosoms burned with joy when in the field on that auspicious day, who now experience the deprivation of liberty in the prison of Duchess county, joined by many of the respectable inhabitants of Poughkeepsie, agreed to celebrate the day (the glory and laurels of which they assisted to reap) by a discharge of 13 cannon at 11 o'clock A. M. and another at 3 P. M. at the conclusion of which the following toasts were drank:

1 General Washington.

2 General Gates, and the victorious army under his command on the day we now celebrate.

3 The immortal memory of the officers and men who fell in defence of American liberty.

4 The United States in Congrefs.

5 The Governor and State of New York.

6 May the patriotic fons of freedom, who now experience our fate in the American prifons be foon releafed on honorable terms.

7 May the fate of Burgoyne and his army, fpeedily befall every enemy to America.

8 May the principles of liberty throughout the United States, be ftronger cemented than ever.

9 The King and Queen of France.

10 The honorable members who formed the Federal Convention.

11 May the recommendation of the Federal Convention, meet with a general approbation throughout the United States.

12 May the citizens of the State of Rhode Ifland be convinced of their error, and repent.

13 May the revolution of America be held dear by every fon of freedom till time fhall be no more.

After which the company retired, having obferved the greateft good humour and decency, to their refpective habitations.

PROVIDENCE, Oct. 20.

A correfpondent informs, that the Baptifts, at their yearly affociation laft month, iffued the following information and advice to their brethren, viz.

"Notwithftanding the great expence of blood and treafure during the laft war, to ward off flavery from ourfelves, we are informed, that in various parts of this country, many have recurred to the horrid practice of fending our fhipping to Africa, to bring from thence the natives, and to fell them as flaves in the Weft Indies: And as Man-ftealing is a capital crime, by the laws of God (See Deut. xxiv. 7, 1 Tim. i. 10) we, therefore, earneftly defire all our brethren to guard againft giving the leaft countenance to that Heaven-daring wickednefs."

He adds, "By late advices from London, many are employed with great attention in that city, in preparing matters to revive before parliament, at their enfuing feffions, the iniquity and impolicy of the African flave trade; and fay that they have many eminent fupporters in parliament, who give them great encouragement. Clarkfon, author of the Effay on the flavery and Commerce of the Human Species, is indefatigable in his exertions on this important occafion; and an affociation is alfo formed, whofe united endeavours are likely to be very ufeful in exciting attention to the enormity of the evil, not only in Great Britain, but in France, and other parts of Europe."

Philadelphia, Nov. 1.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY.

SATURDAY, October 27.

THE houfe met purfuant to adjournment.

Several petitions were prefented and ordered to lie on the table.

The petition of Mary Bioren was prefented, but after a few obfervations, it was agreed on all fides, that the prayer of the petition could not be granted by the legiflature, and therefore leave was given to withdraw it.

A petition from Meffrs. Wells and Clifford, the owners of the fhip Anna, lately condemned, was prefented, and being read a fecond time, it was committed after an oppofition, in which Meffrs. Findley and M'Lean infifted that it was not a matter within the jurifdiction of the houfe, as it was in effect an appeal from the decifion of the executive branch of government upon a queftion exclufively cognizable there; and however it might be cloaked, it could only be confidered as an application for the remiffion of a fine or forfeiture with which the legiflature could not comply. But to thefe obfervations, Meffrs. Peters, Robinfon, and Fitzfimons anfwered, that it was uncandid and unufual to oppofe the commitment of any petition, and that if the law of which the petitioners complained had worked injuftice to them, or was in its general operation a grievance to the citizens, it became the duty of the houfe to interpofe for the relief of an injured individual, and if neceffary to repeal or alter the law itfelf. By fending the petition to a committee, this matter might be properly confidered, and if relief was granted to the petitioners it ought not to be called an appeal from the council, but an appropriation of the public money, which was indifputably the province of the legiflature.

The fecretary of the council prefented a meffage, in which it is ftated among other things, that New York had cordially co-operated with this ftate refpecting the infurgents at Wyoming, and had feized Doctor Levingfton about the fame time that Franklin had been apprehended.

The prefident and council recommends the unaccountable ftagnation of the paper money to the immediate attention of the houfe.

In the meffage were inclofed the refolve of Congrefs tranfmitting the new Federal Conftitution, the plan of affociation of the Wyoming infurgents, and fundry other papers, among which were letters from Dr Levingfton to John Franklin, promifing him the moft ftrenuous affiftance, reproaching him with his inactivity, and urging him to a bloody and decifive conduct againft the government of Pennfylvania, and its officers and adherents.

The meffage and papers were read a fecond time, and referred to a committee of arrangement.

Mr. M'Lean faid, he had intended to trouble the houfe with fome obfervations upon the depreciation of paper currency, and to move for the appointment of a committee to revife the law for eftablifhing a loan-office, in order to prevent any further loans upon mortgage; but as the fubject was alluded to in the meffage from council, it was agreed to wait till the committee of arrangement had reported.

The houfe adjourned till 3 o'clock on Monday afternoon.

MONDAY, October 29.

The houfe met purfuant to adjournment.

Several petitions were prefented and ordered to lie on the table.

The committee of arrangement on the papers tranfmitted by council reported, and the feveral articles which they thought proper for the attention of the houfe were referred to committees.

The fecretary of council informed the houfe, that council requefted a conference with a committee of the houfe, at 11 o'clock to-morrow, upon the difturbances which had happened at Wyoming, and a committee being accordingly appointed for that purpofe, the houfe adjourned till to-morrow morning at half paft 9 o'clock.

TUESDAY, October 30.

The houfe met purfuant to adjournment.

An error in the minutes of yefterday's proceedings being rectified, Mr. Fitzfimons moved to poftpone the order of the day for chufing Printers 'till Thurfday, and that the feveral applications be in the mean time referred to a committee, which was done accordingly.

Mr. George Clymer moved that the committee appointed to confer with council have leave to withdraw, when a queftion arifing whether there would be a quorum left, Mr. Lollar moved to adjourn.—The houfe then adjourned to meet to-morrow morning at half paft 9 o'clock.

Extract of a letter from Charlefton, South Carolina, dated Oct. 9. 1787.

"The very cold and changeable weather that we have had here, has caufed great ficknefs; and a diforder begins to rage, that is very alarming indeed: it is an inftantaneous mortification all over the body; which proves their death a few hours after they are affected with it. A very intimate acquaintance of mine, a few nights ago, was as well at eleven o'clock at night as he ever was, was inftantly ftruck with a chillnefs and mortification, which began in his feet, ran up his legs and thighs, and againft morning he was a corpfe.

"Trade here begins to flourifh; veffels from Europe begin to come in very faft; and it is faid there will be more goods imported this fall than any one fince the war: and our crops of rice and indigo will be much larger this fall than for many years paft, from their prefent appearance.—An Indian war is greatly talked of, and thought inevitable."

Private accounts from New-Jerfey fay, that it is more than probable the legal tender will be taken off their late paper emiffion, at the enfuing feffion of the Affembly.

Further accounts are juft come by way of Pittfburg, from the commiffioners employed to afcertain the northern boundary of the ftate. Some weeks ago, we gave our readers information, that on the 29th of Auguft, thefe gentlemen, affifted by the commiffioners on the part of the ftate of New-York, were advanced weftward to the river Canawango, (a northerly branch of the Allegany) which they croffed at the diftance of 195 miles from the beginning, at the bank of the Delaware; and that they had learned, that the Canawango iffued from a fmall lake, near the fouth-eaft quarter of lake Erie. The letters now received are two weeks later. The line had two days before been conducted to Venango or the Beuf river, or French creek, but the diftance from Canawango is not given. At Venango begins the ufual poftage to Prefquifle, a good harbour on lake Erie. At this place, Capt. Jonathan Hart, of Connecticut, with a fmall company of federal troops, are pofted. He was bufy erecting works at the diftance of a mile and a half from the Old Fort. Some of the commiffioners had penetrated in a boat to lake Candahque, at the head of the Canawango, and through this fine piece of frefh water, which is from three quarters of a mile wide to four miles wide, has good level land on its banks, and lies much higher than lake Erie; a circumftance which precludes all idea of a water communication between the two lakes. Quitting their boating, thefe perfons took the old path, and after nine miles walk, arrived at the fhore of lake Erie, though the direct diftance be perhaps no more than feven. The dividing ridge of land between the two lakes is within one mile and a half of the lefs lake. Thence the defcent to lake Erie feems to be confiderable, probably 100 feet; but a good road may be eafily made between them.

It appears by accounts from Charlefton, that attempts have been made to deftroy that town by fire, fimilar to thofe lately practifed in New-York. A reward of 60l. has been offered for difcovering the actual incendiaries, and 20l. for the difcovery of any other perfons concerned therein.

The exertions which the Executive and Legiflative branches of government are about to make for reftoring the credit of our paper currency, will be of the moft critical importance to the poor inhabitants of this city, who have no other hope for their fupport during the approaching winter. It is fincerely wifhed, that every friend to humanity may affift our rulers in this undertaking: and as no man, who weighs the bufinefs well, can doubt the folidity of the fecurity upon which the late emiffion is founded, every oppofition muft proceed upon party politics, which cannot excufe the uncharitable and ruinous confequences to the individual as well as the public character and profperity. The dread that other emiffions will take place, if this fucceeds, muft now be done away in the mind of every one, who thinks the new federal conftitution will be adopted.

We hear that the Prefbytery of Donegal lately affembled in Cumberland county, after finifhing their ecclefiaftical bufinefs, unanimoufly agreed to ufe their influence with their refpective congregations to promote the adoption of the new federal government. Thefe pious and fenfible men, it feems, confidered the honor of God, and the fuccefs of their labors in the miniftry, as intimately connected with the eftablifhment of a government, whofe objects are the refloration of order, juftice and conftitutional liberty to our country.

Late on Monday evening laft, a building (the property of the widow Carfon) in Third-ftreet, near Market-ftreet, took fire, and was entirely confumed. A large building adjoining the property of the fame perfon, and commonly called the Harp and Crown tavern, at prefent occupied by Mr. M'Shane, alfo took fire, and, after burning fome time, was with great difficulty faved from entire deftruction by the activity of the citizens.

Extract of a letter from a gentleman in Peterfburg to his friend in this city.

"Though it is expected fome oppofition will be made to the Conftitution recommended by the late Convention, yet it is the prevailing opinion, that a large majority will be in favor of adopting it. Meetings are every where going forward, to recommend it to the legiflature, who are now fitting, to take every ftep dependent on them to forward this bufinefs.

"All the difinterefted in our community that I have met with feem happy in the profpect of fome more efficient government taking place—And I think there can be no doubt but its happy effects will be felt throughout this ftate more particularly."

Extract of a letter from a gentleman in the weftern country to his friend in this city.

'It hath been reported, that a great number of copies of the propofed Conftitution was directed to be printed in the Englifh and German languages, to be diftributed throughout the ftate. I wifh it were done, that the people might have an opportunity of reading it, and judging for themfelves. Much time elapfes before information can reach the induftrious yeomanry of the ftate that are diftant from the feat of government.—If a convention is to be chofen, the great body of the people will be ignorant of the plan to be decided upon, and be therefore unable to determine whether they ought to vote for perfons who would oppofe it or advocate it.—If it will bear the examination of the people, who are to be bound thereby, why is fuch precipitancy ufed?'

Extract of a letter from Hifpaniola, Sept 25.

"Every article of our tropical produce here is very high, not even excepting molaffes, for which the demand from your continent is really immenfe, particularly from the two governments of Virginia and Connecticut. The intendant of French Hifpaniola, M. Marbois, refides at Port-au Prince, and, contrary to the expectations of many who have arrived hither from the United States, feems, upon feveral late occafions, rather inclined to look upon the Americans as ftrangers."

Letters from Charlefton, South-Carolina, advife, that "northern produce is very low in that ftate—flour felling for fix dollars per barrel, cheefe 5d. per lb. apples 5s. per barrel, potatoes about 1s. per bufhel, hams 7d. per lb. candles 1s. per lb. and other articles in like proportion. There is befides this at leaft 20 per cent. difcount upon the paper money, and whoever would wifh to purchafe hard, cannot be accommodated under an allowance of thirty-three and one-third."

EXTEMPORE on DEATH.

By Harriet Falconer, an Englifh Lady, aged 14.

O Cruel Death, thou fatal canker-worm,
Which on the damafk cheek of Beauty prey'ft;
With thee the flave and fovereign too are one.
The tears of parents and the fighs of friends
Move not thy fteely heart, nor can avert,
E'en for a moment thy uplifted ftroke.
'Tis not the purple fplendour of a throne,
The glitt'ring pomp of Luxury and Wealth,
Nor all the riches which Peru can yield,
Can bribe thy favour, or thy pity prove:
E'en female beauty, of refiftlefs force,
Could ne'er thy rage, infatiate monfter, tame.

ANECDOTE of VOLTAIRE.

Cumberland is accufed of ftealing.—He may adopt the fame defence which Voltaire did when M. l'Abbe Pellegrin complained that he had pillaged fome lines from him, and introduced them into a tragedy of his own. Foreign Intelligence.

CONSTANTINOPLE, June 12.

ON the return of the Imperial ministers from Cherson, the preparations for war were considerably abated; and as M. St. Remy, captain of artillery, who succeeded Baron de Tott in that department, is returned to Paris, it is imagined there will be no war between Russia and the Porte this season. The grand admiral Hassen Pacha arrived at Alexandria from Grand Cairo, about the middle of May, with immense treasures taken from the unfortunate merchants who resided with Murad Bey. He has pillaged all the castles of the Arabs, and levied enormous contributions, but has not re-established peace in Egypt.

On the 24th of May, the first division of the Turkish naval armament anchored under the cannon of Oczakow; and on the 10th of June the second division, consisting of 30 sail, entered the Black Sea; and a favorable wind, it is said, in four days carried them to the place of their destination. A third division of 10 sail remained at the entrance of the Bosphorus to be joined by 10 sail more from the port of Constantinople. These movements gave rise to a report, that an action had taken place between the Russian and Turkish fleets in the Black Sea, to the disadvantage of the latter, which had caused some commotion among the Janesaries; but was soon contradicted.

Her Imperial majesty, having visited the most celebrated cities of Crimea, passed the lines of Precop on the 30th of May. On the 31st she found herself among the first chain of mountains to the south of Crimea, from which she enjoyed a prospect of the most beautiful valleys, cultivated fields, orchards, and populous villages, that is any where to be seen in the habitable globe. Towards the evening a body of 1000 Tartars, completely armed, came to meet her, and escorted her to Batcheasary, where she lodged in the palace of the ancient Chans. June 2, she left that place; and on the 14th arrived at Bialogorod: and at Moscow on the 23d O. S. where she was met by the Grand Dukes Alexander and Constantine. July 22, she arrived, with her suite, at her palace of Carsko-zelo, near Petersburg, in perfect health.

July 21, His Polish majesty arrived at Warsaw, after an absence of five months.

MESSINA, July 21.

All the volcanos in Sicily are now in eruption—Strombolo and Lampari vomit vast torrents of lava. Mount Etna has opened another crater near to that of 1780—the lava at first seemed to direct its course towards Catania and Paterno, and at this moment it threatens the city of Randazzo with destruction. The column of fire which issues from the crater, is so considerable, that we distinctly see it from this place, which is more than 20 leagues distant.

LONDON, August 14.

It is but too true, that from some very recent occurrences, too well authenticated to doubt the truth, English seamen are of late fallen into such disrepute, that the owners and captains of ships in every trade, prefer foreigners; who if they have less nautical knowledge, make it up by obedience to command, and diligence in their employ. It concerns the nation at large to bring our brave tars to a sense of their duty, and their lost dignity.

Yesterday a mail from Ostend seems to confirm the opinion, that the States of Holland alarmed by a separation of the confederacy, the number of people that have left the province, and the quantity of specie sent out of that country to other banks for security; to which may be added, the decay of trade, and a prospect of their commerce being diverted into another channel, if the troubles should continue, seem to be returning to reason, and are set down to consider of the terms proposed for an accommodation, which may probably have the desired effect. In Austrian Flanders, however, the prospect is far different: The Brabanters talk of opposing the Emperor to the utmost, who, however, is not to be diverted from his purpose, and by the troops now in motion towards that quarter, will carry by force, what he has before put in the resemblance of recommendation.

At Maidstone, a whimsical jue d' esprit was some little time ago played off, by some person whose aim seemed to be the annoyance of the inhabitants. He advertised for a quantity of dogs and cats, having as he averred, a contract for supplying the colony of Botany Bay with those animals, for the destruction of vermin. The advertisement was put in the Kentish Gazette, and they were desired to be brought by a certain day to the Star-inn. The consequence was, that the town was on the day appointed, and has been ever since, swarming with these animals. On the recent assembling of the militia, a petition was proposed in the Town hall, that they would set about extirpating these animals, in order that the embodying of them might answer at least some one useful purpose.

There are few improvements in this country more striking than the facility of communication between all the parts of the kingdom. The ease with which the longest journies are now performed, and the speed with which letters are conveyed, appears little less than miraculous when compared to the state of travelling forty or fifty years ago.—To prove this, a curious fact may be mentioned, which is, that a letter is conveyed from Aberdeen to Falmouth, and the answer from Falmouth back to Aberdeen in 14 days, and the distance between the two places is 800 miles—so that the coaches travel at the rate of 1600 miles in the fortnight—an expedition which by our fathers would have been ascribed to magic.

Sept. 3. A very serious quarrel, it is said, is likely to take place between the courts of Spain and Portugal, unless soon accommodated to the satisfaction of the latter. It seems that dollars to an immense amount, have been for some time past brought into Portugal by permission of the Spanish government, when all of a sudden an edict appeared, forbidding any farther commerce of specie.—At the time this edict was published, there were vast sums, to the amount of some millions of dollars coming to Lisbon, through the territories of his Catholic Majesty, which were seized upon as contraband, tho' the property of the Portuguese merchants. The court of Portugal has made a positive demand of that of Madrid, of the restitution of the dollars.

A squadron of Portuguese men of war will shortly appear in the Tagus, and it is said her Faithful Majesty is determined to make reprisals to the amount of the sums that have been seized; alledging that the court of Madrid have no just reason to issue such an unexpected edict, when it is considered that there has been more specie imported into Cadiz this year, than was ever known in any preceding one.

The emperor, as has been already noticed, received the first account of the revolution that had happened in the Netherlands, at Limburg, on the road to his capital, with the ratification by count Kaunitz, the Imperial prime minister at Vienna, of the promises made to the states by their governors; accompanied with a representation of the motives of their proceedings, which they declare have no other foundation than the firmest persuasion that the new system is as destructive to the interests of his Imperial majesty, as to the welfare of his Belgic people.

In the dispatch remitted on the sudden to this unwelcome news, his majesty expresses great surprise at the state of affairs in the Low Countries; declares his inability to form any idea of the complaints made by the respective estates; and disapproves of the conduct of the prince de Kaunitz. His majesty requires the archduke and archduchess, with the minister Belgioso, to repair to Vienna, and also the deputies from the several provinces, that he may enquire into their complaints, and determine accordingly.

The result of the emperor's interview with count Kaunitz, is now made public, and addressed as follows:

To the Right Rev. and Rev. Fathers in GOD, Noble, Dear, and Well-beloved, We the EMPEROR and KING.

My Chancellor of State has presented me your remonstrance dated the 22d of June last; and I wish, in answer to its contents, to acquaint you, by these presents, that it never was my intention to overturn the constitution of my provinces in Flanders, and that all the instructions, with which I have charged my governors general, have invariably tended, and without even the shadow of any personal interest, to the advantage of my faithful subjects, in the Low Countries; at the same time that I would not deprive the body of the nation of any of their ancient rights, privileges and liberties enjoyed by them. Every step I have taken ought to convince you of the truth of this assertion, if you yet remain willing to render them the justice which is their due.

I occupied myself on some reforms in the administration of justice, only at the instance of numerous and repeated requests that were made me, praying to obtain a shorter or less difficult mode of proceedings in law; and the superintendants appointed in consequence had no other aim than to see that the laws were put in force, and that those who were amenable to them should pay them proper regard.

In regard to many ancient privileges, I only wish to reform, at the desire of those concerned, the abuses that were become hurtful, and which had crept in by the lapse of time, contrary to the intent of their original purposes.

Far, then, from foreseeing any opposition, and especially one so criminal and bold, I expected that the states of my provinces in Flanders would have entered on the regulations with as much alacrity as gratitude: and I still am willing, as a kind guardian, and as a man who knows how to commiserate the ill-advised, and who wishes to forgive, to attribute what has yet been done, and what you have dared to do, to a misinterpretation of my intentions, made and spread abroad by persons more attached to their private interest than to the general good, and who have no estate to lose.

Be it as it may, it is my pleasure that the execution of the new ordinances in question should remain, for the present, suspended; and when their royal highnesses, my lieutenants and governors general, agreeably to the intentions which I have lately communicated to them, shall be assembled at Vienna with the deputies of the different states, to represent before me their grievances aloud, and to learn my intentions, which they will always find calculated on the principles of strict justice, and tending solely to the benefit of my subjects, we will then agree on some regulations to be made for the general good, according to the established law of the land.

But if, contrary to every intent, this last token of my goodness towards you should be disregarded, inasmuch that you should refuse to come and lay before me your complaints, your fears, your doubts, and to listen to me with confidence, and that you continue your shameful excesses and unpardonable proceedings, then you will draw on yourselves all the unhappy consequences which must result from them, and which I pray God may never come to pass.

Signed JOSEPH.
(Counter-signed) A. G. DE LEDERER.

In consequence of this address, a general assembly of the states of all the Austrian Low Countries was held on the 18th past; the issue of which was, to name a deputation to be sent to Vienna, as the emperor desired; and to yield to his Imperial majesty every thing which does not directly lead to the violation of their oaths. On this resolution, the marching of troops was countermanded, and the execution of the new system suspended.

AMERICA.

SAVANNAH, Sept. 13.

Since our last a discovery has been made of a number of utensils with which the paper medium of South-Carolina appears to have been counterfeited, at Mrs. Jones's plantation at White Bluff, and the overseer, Kelly, together with two others, named Westmore, alias Purcel, and Stewart, have been taken up and committed to prison on suspicion of being the persons who had made use of the utensils, they having for some time past been observed to frequent the place where they were found. Another man of the name of Davis, who had gone into the country, and one Sevier, who lately went to New-Providence with captain M'Neal, are also suspected to have been concerned in this business.

We are informed that a white boy has lately been killed and scalped by the Indians on the Oconee river.—Also that, week before last, on the same river, nine of the savages were killed by people hunting cattle, whom they had attacked. Some of the latter, 'tis said, were slightly wounded.

CHARLESTON, Sept. 17.

We learn from Georgia that a gang of seven villains have been discovered in the employment of counterfeiting the paper medium of this state: five of them, with all their apparatus, were apprehended, and are to be sent to this city to take their trial; two more of the gang, furnished with about 300l. of the counterfeit money, it is said, are gone into the back country to purchase cattle. We hear that proper persons are sent in pursuit of them.

Saturday night the Jewish Synagogue was broke open, and one of the sacralegeous robbers taken in the fact; two others made their escape. The villains failed in their intent, the greatest part of the silver having been, as usual, removed, only a silver spice box, which is yet missing. The five books of Moses, which contain the laws and commandments of Almighty God, were wantonly thrown about the floor. The elders of that society have appointed Wednesday next a day of fast & thanksgiving, for what has and has not been accomplished.

SALEM, October 25.

Last Wednesday was the anniversary of that glorious triumph of the American arms, the capture of General Burgoyne and his veteran army. On this occasion the Cadet and Artillery Companies in this town, and a Volunteer Company raised in ward No. 4, dressed in rifle frocks and overall's, and commanded by captain John Page, were called out by their respective commanders. The Cadets and captain Page's company formed a line in Court-street about 11 o'clock in the forenoon, under the command of major Abbot, by whom they were reviewed; after which they marched to the common, where they manœuvred till half past 12, when they grounded their arms, and were dismissed till 2. In the afternoon, after some further exercises on the common, they marched into Court-street, where mock engagements were performed; and a feu de joie closed the day.——The several companies acquired much credit by their performances. This was the first public appearance of captain Page's company, whose propriety of conduct exceeded what we had a right to expect, from the short time they had been under discipline.

On Thursday last, colonel Blanchard's regiment of general Hull's brigade, was reviewed at Reading, and made a very respectable appearance.

BOSTON, Oct. 17.

Perhaps a greater opportunity for the display of philanthropy and genuine patriotism was never presented, than that now offered to the legislature of this commonwealth.

The American Constitution comes under their cognizance at a most auspicious moment. Freely, impartially, and as men who feel for their country, may they take up this momentous subject! and may the God of their Fathers inspire them with those disinterested and honest principles which shall enable them to decide upon this great business, not merely as citizens of Massachusetts, but as members of the great American Family! Their constituents repose the fullest confidence in their superior judgment, their public spirit, and an anxiety to discharge their duty as men that must give an account at the supreme tribunal of Heaven.

May they therefore keep their minds unprejudiced, and open to conviction! A predetermined spirit on this occasion will preclude the admission of knowledge, and deprive the people of the blessings of independence, peace, liberty, and safety, those great objects for which rivers of blood have been shed, and millions of treasure expended—these blessings appear to be suspended on our acceptance of that stupendous effort of human wisdom, the American Constitution.

October 20. On Wednesday last, the regiment of this town, including captain Johnson's artillery, captain Turner's fusileers, and captain Green's light infantry, under the command of col. May, completed the annual duty assigned them by law. At 12 o'clock the line was formed on the common, and about one the whole marched to the southern extremity of the town, and from thence into State-street, where they were dismissed by companies.—Previous to which, the following was read in orders:——

Abstract of REGIMENTAL ORDERS.

Boston, Oct. 17, 1787.

THIS day the military duty assigned by law for the Boston regiment will be completed for the year. The rapid proficiency made by both officers and men, in the short period of six months, must be highly pleasing to all the friends of order and good government.

When we take a retrospective view of the militia at large, and of this regiment in particular, at the commencement of the present year, we cannot behold but with a degree of admiration, the great contrast presented at this moment. At the beginning of the year 1787, anarchy and confusion, (which by the blessing of Heaven have now subsided) stalked horribly in many parts of this commonwealth: detachments from the militia were called for to support the government under which we lived; the militia at that time was in the most disorderly state; this metropolis was without officers and consequently without soldiers; and it was with difficulty guards were mounted for the safety of this town in December last.

The colonel congratulates the officers and men that the scene is changed, and the regiment completely organized—the industrious citizen at a short notice leaves his avocation, and appears a complete soldier in the field. The commanding officer ascribes this to the abilities and great attention of the officers, and to the willingness of the men he has the honor to command: And as a gratification of his own feelings, takes this method to convey his thanks to them, for their attention to, and alertness in executing his orders through the course of the season, and this day in particular. It is his earnest wish that the Boston regiment, the first uniformed in the commonwealth, may increase in military knowledge, harmony and friendship, and convince the world that their conduct is as uniform as their appearance is respectable.

By order of the Colonel,

ANDREW CUNNINGHAM, Adjt.

Same day the independent cadets paraded, and as usual, did honor to the military character.

The Middlesex regiment of militia, under the command of col. Hagar, was yesterday reviewed on Cambridge common, by the hon. major general Brooks. The Medford independent light infantry—the Charlestown and Watertown artillery, and some companies of the infantry were in uniform—and the whole exhibited a martial and respectable appearance.

October 25. Last Friday a committee of the two branches of the legislature, appointed to consider that part of his excellency's communications which related to the constitution proposed by the late convention of the states, laid their report before the honorable senate, who after debating thereon with that freedom, good humour, and candour, which forever does honour to a republican assembly, agreed to the report, with some amendments, and sent it the following day to the honourable house of representatives, for their concurrence.——The substance of the resolutions of the senate, as we are informed, is a recommendation to the several towns and districts within the commonwealth, to elect delegates not exceeding the numbers they are empowered respectively by law to send, as members to the house of representatives, and an order to the secretary to transmit printed copies of the papers received from Congress relating to the subject, together with the resolutions, to the sheriffs of the counties, by express, with positive directions to them, by themselves, or their deputies, personally to deliver them to the selectmen of every town and district within their respective counties.

Ten o'clock, yesterday, being the time assigned by the honourable house of representatives, for considering the question, whether the house would concur with the senate in a resolve, to call a convention according to recommendation of Congress, for the acceptance of the newly proposed plan of federal government? Mr. Parsons moved for the order of the day, when the resolve which was sent down from the senate, was opened and debated. Dr. Kilham rose, and argued very warmly upon the impropriety of being in a hurry about a measure of so much consequence to the community; and said that he understood many people thought the new system would not go down, if not suddenly pushed, which was one reason why he was against the measure. He observed upon the right the legislatures had to appoint the late convention, upon the commission under which our members went to the convention, and upon the question how far they had abided by that commission. Dr. Kilham dwelt some time also upon the right of either convention or people to absolve the old confederation, unless in the way stated in the articles themselves.—Mr. Parsons and Dr. Jarvis, in what they observed, appeared to express the sense of the house, that so far as Dr. Kilham slid into the merits of the proposed government, so far he was out of the question, which was in fact, only whether the house would concur with the senate, to call the convention. General Brooks made a more particular reply to Dr. Kilham's observations, and pointed out clearly, that what the Dr. had said was matter, much better to be before the convention than before that house; and that the Dr. was premature, as he was zealous in his reflections upon the subject. Mr. Dawes rose and said, that he should not have arisen, but to combat one idea of Dr. Kilham, which he thought had not been observed upon by the other gentlemen, which was "that an adoption of the new constitution would be an unjust breach of the old compact." Mr. Dawes remarked, that he was sorry Dr. Kilham disputed the people's rights so warmly, and that the Dr. was so much against the people's being permitted to think for themselves. Mr. Dawes said that as to the clause in the old confederation, that it could not be annulled or altered, but in a certain way; he thought it not unlike the law of the Romans, which contained a clause prohibiting any future repeal,—but which succeeding legislatures soon found a way to annul, by repealing that very prohibitory clause. Mr. Dawes ridiculed Dr. Kilham's expectation of civil war and misery being the consequence of only nine states acceding to the new measures; and said that some writers had thought that the house of Hanover was brought to the English throne by not more than a third of the people, and yet that civil liberty never flourished higher than in the administration of that house; whereas he said, "the probability was, that the proposed government would take place, if at all, by the wishes of almost all the people of all or most of the states." Many observations were made by the above and other gentlemen, but we have neither recollection nor opportunity to add further; only that the question for a concurrence being put, it passed in the affirmative, by a majority of 129 out of 161 voters.

By this resolution, the convention is to meet at the Court-house in Boston, the second Wednesday in January. The senate had determined the meeting at an earlier period, but this was over-ruled in the house, in consideration of the necessity of sufficient time being allowed to the people to consider and digest a system of government with which the prosperity and happiness of the people of this country, is so ultimately connected. The members of the convention are to be chosen in the same manner, by the same description of persons, and to receive the same pay as representatives, with this difference, that the sums due to them in consequence of their services, are to be defrayed from the public treasury, out of any money that shall be there, anterior to the sitting of the convention, from any unappropriated funds under the controul of government. The words of this resolution correspond exactly with the words of the resolution of the federal convention, and of Congress, empowering the respective legislatures to call a convention; and this mode of expression we suppose, is wisely calculated to prevent those difficulties that might otherwise have arisen.

We have the pleasure of assuring our readers, that the utmost candour and good humour subsisted on this interesting occasion.—The galleries were crouded, and hundreds of spectators were admitted on the floor, and on the unoccupied seats of the house, drawn thither by their extreme curiosity and impatience to know the result of this novel and extraordinary debate. On the whole, every thing terminated to the entire satisfaction of this numerous concourse of citizens; and we can only hope and believe, from the unanimity on this, that the same liberality and candour will prevail, when this town will be honoured by its being the seat of as august a body, as ever sat in this commonwealth, to amend the defects and imperfections which have so long been complained of in the former confederation, and to secure peace, liberty and safety to this extensive continent.

His excellency the governor, with advice of council, has been pleased to appoint Thursday, the 29th day of November next, to be observed throughout this commonwealth as a day of public Thanksgiving and Praise.

The supreme executive have also been pleased to grant a fortnight's reprieve to John Shean, who was to have been executed this day, for burglary.

We are informed that William Manning, now under sentence of death, for treason, in the county of Berkshire, was designed to be excepted in the pardon granted by the general court in June last, but there being a mistake in his christian name, he returned into this state, and neglecting to comply with the conditions of the statute, by taking an oath of allegiance to the commonwealth, he lost the benefit of the pardon.

SHIP NEWS.

The ship Constitution yesterday morning made sail to observe the motion of the anti-federal fleet. She was attacked at the entrance of the harbour by a *small shaving-mill from a neighbouring port.

* Shaving-mill is a name for a little piratical boat, which appeared on our eastern coast in the late war, and pillaged without discretion.

which like a musketo played under her stern with a buzzing from small arms for some time, owing to the Constitution having miss'd her stays; but this slight built machine was sunk by the first broadside of our new federal ship.

LANSINGBOURGH, (N. Y.) Oct. 8.

The generality of the inhabitants of the city of Albany, this town, and the country adjacent, highly approve the new constitution, and are fully determined to use their endeavours to have it take place as speedily as possible, as the only means left in our power to prevent our total ruin as individuals or a nation.

We can, from good authority, assure our readers, that a number of the friends of an officer * of high rank, in the civil department in this state, have lately waited on him and informed him, that although they highly esteemed him, both in his public and private capacities, yet, should he do any thing in opposition to the new fœderal constitution they must and would immediately withdraw their friendship, and no longer consider him as a friend to the welfare and happiness of his country.

* Governor Clinton.

NORTHAMPTON. Oct. 24.

A late writer says, "Having lately been through great part of this state, I can assure the public, that at least nine tenths of its inhabitants are now ready and willing to receive the new government: Many express the greatest impatience to have the general court meet together, that they may proceed on the business with such speed as may give this state an opportunity to do themselves the honor of being the first in the union to accept it, as they were first to repel the unconstitutional attempts of a British parliament. Let it but appear that a Hancock, a Washington, and a Franklin approve the new government, and who will not embrace it?

"I have conversed much with all classes of people on the subject of the new Federal Government, and find that all agree in the opinion, that if we do not adopt it, our credit, our character, our existence as a nation, is at an end: But that on the contrary, if we are wise enough to know in this our day, the things which make for our peace, we shall at once ratify and confirm it—we shall then behold America with extended arms, inviting the numerous oppressed and distressed inhabitants of Europe; we shall see them flocking to America; our woods and waste lands will become at once valuable, and in great demand, the present proprietors would of course be greatly benefited thereby; every European ship which should enter our ports, would by properly laid duties, assist in paying our debts our taxes will diminish—our national character will rise—and sciences will be cultivated with redoubled ardor—every kind of business will increase—and in a word, this continent will soon become, under the new government, the delight and envy of the European world."

NEW-YORK, October 30.

Extract of a letter from Edinburgh, Aug. 30.

"Such is the rage here for keeping the Sabbath holy, according to God's ordinance and the king's proclamation, that several pious divines and inspired elders of the presbytery, have agreed to refrain in future from the chaste embraces of their lawful spouses, on the eve of the Sabbath, and after evening prayers on Sunday;—when this resolution comes to be fully known, it may possibly be productive of some spirited Curtain Lectures, on the part of the holy sisterhood."

BALTIMORE, October 26.

On Wednesday and Thursday evening the young ladies of Mrs. Alcock's Academy, in this town, exhibited many specimens of their progress in rhetoric, music, and other accomplishments, which were highly satisfactory to a numerous and polite audience, assembled on the occasion, at the old theatre, and reflected the greatest honor on these promising pupils, and their truly respectable governess.

Philadelphia, Nov. 2.

Wednesday last his excellency Benjamin Franklin, esquire, was re-elected President, and the honorable Peter Muhlenberg, esquire, Vice President, of this commonwealth, for the year ensuing.

Very benevolent subscriptions, it is said, have been set on foot in London for the relief of those who suffered some months ago by the fire in Boston. It is observable, however, that the Londoners give themselves credit for this benevolent act, by telling the world, they do it out of mere Christian charity, "notwithstanding the Boston newspapers were distinguishably charged with the grossest scurrility during the late war, against King George and his nation."—Might not the Bostonians reasonably retort, Men and brethren, who have required these things at your hands?

A BON REPOS:

OR, THE

WAY TO SLEEP WELL.

THE man that's innocent and good,
Of heart upright, of serious mood;
Who can on vice reflections cast,
And pity human frailties past;
Sedately think on future actions,
Devoid of parties, sects and factions;
Sincerity regarding most
A parte ante and a parte post:
Can view the sordid without pain,
Plead for the widow without gain;
Succour the orphan, help the maim,
Bestow's what he may loose at game;
Aiding the poor, the rich befriending,
Preventing quarrels, discords ending;
Pray'rs for the oppress'd to Heav'n sending,
His own and others morals mending;
Visits the sick, the naked cloaths,
Receives the strange, th' abandon'd loaths;
The pris'ner looses, captive frees,
Comforts the wretch in miseries;
The hungry feeds, th' unlearned teaches,
Of broken hearts repairs the breaches;
All good performs, all ill does shun,
He safely may go down with sun,
His course is finish'd, his race is run;
On bended knees forgiveness craves,
For sake of him who helps and saves,
Secure in bed his eyes may close,
Assured of a GOOD REPOSE.

LITERARY ARTICLE.

Musical Travels through England. By Joel Collier, organist.

AN attempt to burlesque Dr. Burney's Journals of his travels in Italy and Germany, to ascertain the present state of music abroad.

The following is a specimen of this organist's manner of description.——At my introduction to Mr. Echo, principal performer in the opulent cathedral of Durham, who had so long applied himself to musical notes, that he had actually forgotten all articulate language, I began a long complimental speech, which I had been some time studying.—Most respectable Sir, whose soul is a soul of harmony, and whose body is like a base viol—Here he snatched up his fiddle with an air of great complacency, and drawing the bow gently over the strings said, O, Sir, your most obedient; you compliment me indeed, Sir, too much. I then told him how long a journey I had performed on foot, and that the dusty roads had made me dry. He snatched up his violin, and before he had played above a bar or two, in came a footman with a jug of ale. Next I mentioned modestly my having eat nothing all day—Trut, trut, bish, bash, bush cries the fiddle. Indeed, Sir, replies I, I don't fast for the sake of devotion.—Er, er, ar, querr, quurr, quoth the fiddle, and in came a sirloin of cold beef and mustard and bread, in the twinkling of a fiddle stick.

This gentleman, quoth I, is greater than Orpheus or Eurydice, or the Serpent—no, no, Orpheus could do no such things as these—ale and beef were a note or two above his fiddle!

Soon after came in Mr. Echo's wife, with a—What the deuce are you about, bringing beggars into my house? Mr. Echo catched up the fiddle, and such a jar did I never hear—Arg, erg, urg, gir, gor, gur. I warrant you, she became as dumb as if she were enchanted.

For Griſt Mills & other Water Works

On an extenſive Plan,

One of the beſt ſituations in America is offered

FOR SALE,

Together With

Batſto Iron-Works;

At the forks of Little Egg-Harbour river, one of the moſt healthy ſpots in New Jerſey, 38 miles by land from Philadelphia, and within a few hours ſail of New York.

THE river, communicating with the ſea by the beſt inlet on the Jerſey coaſt, is navigable for veſſels of 200 tons within a few miles of the works; thoſe of 100 tons may approach within one mile; flats and ſcows, carrying 10 or 12 tons, load and unload at the works. The uſual freight to New York or Philadelphia is 10 ſhillings per ton. The furnace ſtream affords plenty of water, in the drieſt ſeaſon, for 3 or 4 pair of mill ſtones, beſides ſupplying the iron works.—An excellent dam, which has been increaſing in ſtrength many years by the cinder from the furnace, is well ſecured from the danger of freſhes, and the works are ſcarcely ever injured or delayed by either ice or back-water, though the tide ſwells to the foot of the dam: mills may therefore be erected at a moderate expence. This being a part of the country in which many people and many teams are neceſſarily employed in collecting and preparing for market the iron and lumber with which it abounds, and at the ſame time illy adapted to the raiſing of grain for their ſupport, there is, and muſt continue to be, a demand for large quantities of midlings, cornell, ſhorts and bran, at advanced prices; and the convenience of conveying flour at a light expence, either to New York or Philadelphia, or to more diſtant markets, will not be overlooked nor conſidered as of ſmall importance, eſpecially as there are few mill ſeats of any conſiderable capacity equally adapted to the New York market, which is not unfrequently ſupplied with ſuperfine flour from Philadelphia. A choice of the various kinds of wheat may be drawn to this ſeat from Virginia, Maryland, Delaware, New Jerſey, and New York with greater eaſe and convenience than to almoſt any other mills now in being.

The FURNACE, which by the extenſive lands annexed to it, is abundantly ſupplied with wood and ore, is now in blaſt, and is noted for producing the beſt hollow ware in America, the metal being peculiarly well adapted to the making of caſtings of all kinds, as well as excellent bar iron.

A FORGE, with four fires and two hammers, belongs to the eſtate, and ſtands about half a mile from the furnace, on another fine ſtream which affords plenty of water.

A SLITTING and ROLLING MILL, having been diſuſed for the laſt two or three years, may want ſome repairs to prepare it for uſe; but the fore-bays and gates are in perfect order, and being in the proper ſpot for griſt mills, may be appropriated to that uſe.

Two SAW MILLS in good order, and a ſmall Griſt Mill.

The MANSION HOUSE is elegantly ſituated about 100 yards from the furnace, on an height which commands a view of the whole works, and of the two villages formed by the ſurrounding buildings belonging to the eſtate, ſuch as barns, ſtables, coal houſes, workſhops, ſtorehouſes and dwellings for workmen. Adjoining the manſion houſe is a large and fruitful garden, affording plenty of vegetables, and well ſtored with choſen fruit trees; alſo a young bearing orchard, containing near 2000 apple trees, moſtly grafted.

Theſe excellent accommodations for extenſive and profitable manufactories, are offered to ſale at a very low rate, and on terms of payment calculated for the eaſe of the purchaſer, who may pay the greater part in the produce of the Iron Works, at a price to be agreed upon; and they are capable of producing more in one year, than will pay the whole price demanded.

For particulars, apply to WILLIAM RICHARDS, at the ſaid Works, JOHN COX, at Bloomſbury, near Trenton, or CHARLES PETTIT, in Philadelphia.

PHILADELPHIA: Printed and Sold by JOHN DUNLAP and DAVID C. CLAYPOOLE;
On the South ſide of Market-ſtreet, the third Houſe Eaſt of Second-ſtreet, where Subſcriptions, Advertiſements, &c. for this Paper, are thankfully received, and PRINTING in its different Branches is done with Care, Elegance and Expedition——Subſcribers to this Paper (in the city) are ſerved with it at their Houſes early every Morning, and thoſe at a diſtance by the quickeſt Conveyance.

Foreign Intelligence.

A faithful TRANSLATION, from the Paris Gazette, of the REMONSTRANCE of the PARLIAMENT of PARIS, to his Majesty, LOUIS XVI. agreed upon by the House, July 24th, 1787.

A MOST respectful address, sire, together with the just alarms of the nation, has been humbly laid at the foot of the throne, by your majesty's most dutiful and faithful parliament. The bare proposal of a duty on stamped paper, has alarmed every individual. After a glorious peace of five years, and a progressive increase of at least one hundred and thirty millions of livres in thirteen years, it seemed as if the word impost was never to come out of a beneficent monarch's mouth, except in rendering it less onerous, or diminishing the number of those already existing. What was our surprise, then, sire, when we were told, that new taxes were projecting by the notables, and that a new one, of a most distressing kind, was to be offered for the approbation of parliament!

The first reflection that naturally occurs, at the very mention of a new duty, is, to enquire into the actual state of the finances. What an administration must the last have been, if the evils that resulted from it require such a desperate remedy? Your majesty must remember how we strove, in 1784 and 1785, to give you a faithful picture of the real situation of the state—which seemed then (or your ministry endeavored to make it appear so) as if inclined to take a turn for the best: but the truth was, that the state was more involved in difficulties than ever. Your parliament, then, sire, did every thing in their power, but in vain, to set truth in its clearest light—Some of your ministers had too great interest not to conceal it from your majesty—All our humble remonstrances proved useless—and there were some of your council who went so far as to make your majesty suspect the purity of our patriotic intentions. The terrible situation of affairs, however, required a speedy and efficacious remedy. The notables, assembled by your majesty's orders, have withdrawn the veil that covered that undermining administration. A dreadful spectacle presented itself to the eye of the astonished nation! An immense deficiency was very visible in the treasury; and every body hastened to propose the means of filling it up, and affording a speedy remedy. How grievous to your majesty's paternal heart must such a discovery have been! How must your astonishment and sorrow have increased, when you reflected on the fatal errors your ministers had long and purposely kept you in!

Such is the consequence, sire, when the choice of ministers falls on persons who are obnoxious to the nation in general: such is the great, but sad, example that teaches monarchs how far they must respect the public opinion, seldom susceptible of error, because men, united together, rarely give or receive an impression contrary to truth. In point of administration, sire, the purest hands are hardly pure enough. A first condescension, or, rather, a first wrong step, leads to a second: no bounds can circumscribe the imprudent minister when once he swerves from his duty. Successive abuses produce an utter confusion, and a fatal disorder. The deep wounds fixed in the constitution demand a remedy; and this, when even certain, will effect but a slow cure.

O, let your majesty deign to pause a while on one of these salutary reflections, the importance of which has been acknowledged by all good monarchs.—— Evil may happen in a single instant, but whole years are scarce sufficient to repair the mischief it causes. The vices of an administration, or, which is the inevitable effect of them, the involuntary error of a just monarch, will sorely distress whole generations.

It is not your parliament's intention, sire, to grieve your majesty's most sensible heart, by expatiating at present on so affecting a subject and recalling so unpleasant a thought; but they take the liberty of humbly intreating your majesty to weigh often these important reflections, in some of those moments when you are meditating in silence on the welfare and happiness of your subjects. It behoves now your parliament to enter, with a noble freedom, upon a subject proposed by your majesty yourself, we mean the projected retrenchments and economical schemes ——— We earnestly entreat you, sire, to be on your guard against the emotions and propensities of your tender heart, in order that the economy already begun may continue, and those reforms adopted and settled be of constant duration. When a pure and enlightened administration endeavours to establish certain principles of economy, it generally meets with some ancient customs that seem to have been long attached to the constitution, and to enjoy the right of prescription. If the minister acts with firmness, he is immediately blamed for his imprudence; if with precaution, the world will censure his weakness; what difficulties will not then in such a case surround the monarch; and will incessantly multiplying about him! courtiers will publicly approve of, nay applaud, the projected reforms, but in secret they will try to weaken, and even prevent their effect; all means will be employed to deceive him; it is then that art, address, and finesse appear in a thousand different forms, actuated by the most imperious of all motives, personal interest: the sovereign thus beset, and attacked on every side by claims, suits, petitions, &c. is forced to listen to importunate clamours, and through the goodness of his heart often grants what could never be obtained through his justice.

The moment the word economy is mentioned, it echoes through the room. The cunning courtier aparently adopts the plan, and wishes to be numbered among the great characters of the nation, whose example he affects to imitate; but he calculates at the same time how long the economical reform may subsist, and how he may render abortive the retrenchments that diminish either his credit or his revenues: all expences but his own seem susceptible of diminution: in a vast administration the weakest pretexts are easily tinged with the colouring of reason; and that economy which has been so often courted, and always expected, appears and disappears in an instant, leaving a black cloud over the beautiful countenance of truth, which some faint rays had begun to render conspicuous.

These reflections, sire, written in the annals of every nation, are the faithful history of the human heart.—Never could the meditation on them be more interesting to your majesty than at present; for the application suits exactly to the urgent circumstances of the times. The more vigour and firmness your majesty will shew for the intended reforms, and salutary resolutions, the more difficulties and obstacles will certainly impede the way: and experience may perhaps have already proved, that the persons interested in these economical views begin to hint as if the proposed sums were equivocal and precarious; and the deductions agreed upon incompatible with old customs, and unlikely to last a long time.

It is in your majesty's power to enforce, with a laudable perseverance, the order that must establish with permanency this indispensible reform. Every thing should undergo the strictest inquiry. Your majesty's justice, which is to us the surest and most sacred pledge, emboldens your parliament to lay before you, without danger of incurring your royal displeasure, some of those remarks and observations that must naturally have occurred to you —— Had you known, sire, the real state of your finances, no doubt, you would not have undertaken those immense edifices that are now building, nor made so many acquisitions onerous to the state; you would not have permitted so many exchanges of the crown lands, nor granted those excessive liberalities that the importunate and intriguing are always sure of obtaining. The facility of obtaining money from the treasury (the fatal bane of all administrations) would never have been suffered to increase, for it exposes every moment the sovereign to some dangerous surprise; it squanders secretly the publick revenue, and can never over balance, with its pretended utility the great inconveniencies always attending it. Your majesty would certainly never have consented to have Paris surrounded by such a magnificent wall; to see * palaces erected for your excise officers at an exorbitant expence, in order to coincide with the views of the farmers-general, who, in expectation of a precarious and distant gain, expend annually those sums that should be appropriated to wants of more real necessity.

All these objects, sire, and many others, the enumeration of which would astonish, are susceptible of amendment; some require a considerable diminution; others an entire suppression. But it is not only the total of each department that should be properly diminished, every part of it should be scrupulously examined, and divested of all its superfluous charges; it should be reduced to the simple and absolutely necessary expence: in so doing your majesty might easily double the intended reform of the forty millions of livres, and this might then prove a real relief to your suffering subjects.

There are honorable economies, sire, that far from diminishing the splendour of a throne, add lustre and dignity to it. Majesty itself may submit to privations. The sovereign is always great when his subjects are happy, and the sight of happiness spread over the whole people is so pompous and brilliant, that it commands public admiration and universal applause.

These diminutions, suppressions, reforms, and economies, so often solicited by your parliaments, demanded by the notables, and promised to their spirited and just perseverance, are wished for and expected every day by the unhappy husbandman, whose tears bedew the very field that contributes to so many useless expences before it has furnished the necessary subsistence to the person who sowed it, for the subsistence of himself and family, and who, deprived of the common necessaries, is forced to take from his poverty itself, wherewith to furnish to the exigencies of the state.

These unhappy beings, sire, Frenchmen by birth, and men, have a double right to enjoy their sacred property even in the bosom of indigence; but as they cannot claim it themselves at your majesty's feet, let their claims and their rights be ever present before you; let their plaints find their way to the throne and reach your royal person; let them hear your gracious answer, and let them know that your majesty's goodness and justice are the surest supporters they can hope to find near the throne.

The French never consult any interest inseparable from the throne, they are always biassed by their sincere attachment to their monarch; in their fervent zeal and enthusiastic emotions for the royal cause, they have been capable of the greatest sacrifices, and they may fancy the ways and means of the nation as unbounded as their affection. These ways and means therefore must be carefully managed and used at proper times. It should likewise be considered, that the contributions proceeding from the imposts granted to the monarch are only intended as subsidies to the state, and that the sovereign is but the distributor of whatever is not employed for the public weal, which naturally belongs to those who co-operated in levying the contributions, and if they are diverted from their chief and primitive intent, their fertile source will soon become insufficient, and, in a short time, exhausted; particularly if the expences increase in proportion to the receipt.

All kinds of imposts should be proportioned to the necessary wants of the nation, and end with them. Each citizen contributes part of his property for the sake of maintaining public safety, and private tranquility. The people, on such principles, founded on the rights of mankind, and confirmed by reason, should never encrease their contributions but when the expences of the state have undergone all the savings, alterations, and retrenchments they are capable of. It is for this reason, therefore, that your parliament, sire, look upon the duty on stamped paper as intirely opposite to these primitive notions. It would affect the private tranquility, by necessarily opening a way to errors, and thereby would prove far more dangerous than the gabelle (duty on salt; a kind of excise) which was, as has been seen, liable to open frauds. The most exact and habitual attention could hardly be sufficient to distinguish the numberless stamped papers, that are to serve for each respective act of justice or common transaction.

What mistakes will not the greatest part of your subjects be liable to by interchanging these papers, and making use of the one for the other? Many writings, by such involuntary faults, may appear counterfeited in the eye of justice, and the unwary individual will find himself daily exposed to pay exorbitant fines, or to encounter disagreeable and heavy suits at law.

Such a duty, sire, is likewise incompatible with public safety, as it would deeply wound mutual confidence, which is the sure foundation of it. Individuals would be afraid of producing unstamped bills or notes before a tribunal, and in this age, where there are such frequent instances of persons taking all sorts of advantages, and commencing or prolonging vexatious and never ending suits, a wise legislature should be very careful not to introduce new subjects of chicanery. Besides our public trust, sire, and our national dignity, absolutely forbid the introduction of such a dangerous duty.

The moment a declaration is issued, which is generally vicious in a most all its dispositions, a seducing facility of extending its meaning or duration offers itself, and pretences are not wanting for imposing plausibly on the public. Experience furnishes us with too many examples. The two sous and the eight sous per livere for instance, the second warrant for the poll tax, and so many other inventions, which the fertile genius of finances has imagined, and is never at a loss to find to overcharge the subjects, are but a continuation and extension of a duty, simple in its origin; and such an extension, sire, is often divested of any legal authority, and only collected in virtue of the minister's mandate. Without mentioning, sire, the multiplicity of marks, precautions, and fines, annexed to and attending the duty on stamped paper, it is certain that it would cause a delay in public and private business, and obstruct the common daily transactions. All delay is dangerous, and all obstruction must produce a delay. A bill of exchange improperly stamped would be liable to a fine; the fine must be paid immediately by the possessor of the bill; he, therefore, would be obliged to advance the sum for the fine, pay instead of receiving, and be out of his money until the expiration of his unlucky bill. He would be sufferer for other persons faults; and such faults might be renewed several times in one and the same day, in the very same hour: his payments must be affected by it, and his credit called in question. Thence mistrust and doubts will necessarily arise; and you know, sire, that there subsists a kind of chain in the course of exchanges, which strongly binds all the commercial parts of mankind in the known world. Our trading towns would lose, in the eyes of a foreigner, that level or advantage they would wont to enjoy. In short, were not such a duty extremely onerous in itself, its unlimited duration must cause a general alarm. We have often seen taxes, limited until such a time, prolonged even after the intention of the supply had been amply fulfilled; but we did not expect to see one that is to last perpetually, at the very time when a certain period was mentioned for diminishing the national debt.

Louis XIV. established the poll tax in 1695, and the tenth in 1710. The misfortunes and heavy losses sustained towards the latter end of his reign, and the invasion of the kingdom, made him attempt a step, the success of which he very much doubted in his own mind. That great monarch, finding himself obliged to lay such a duty, seemed to be doubtful whether he had a right to lay it; and if parliament then thought it their duty to have it registered, it was because the contribution was to last but a short time—it was chiefly because the exigencies of the state seemed to require a speedy redress. had it not been for these substantial reasons, sire, Louis XIV. would have owned, "that it was the nation alone, reunited in the three general states, that can give the necessary consent for establishing a perpetual tax: that the parliament were never invested with such a power; and that, charged by the sovereign to announce his will to the people, they had never been charged by the people to represent them so implicitly."

This is what your respectful parliament takes now the liberty of mentioning to your majesty; and, penetrated with this truth, alarmed at the enormous deficiency, and struck with the deplorable disorders that have produced it, and might render it perpetual, they wish very much to see the whole nation assembled, before they register any new impost. The nation alone, thus assembled, and instructed in the true state of the finances may extirpate the great abuses that are existing at present, and offer great resources to obviate them in future.

It is for you, sire, that the honour was reserved of renewing those national assemblies, which rendered the reign of Charlemain so great and illustrious: assemblies that repaired all king John's disasterous calamities, and concurred with parliament to re-establish Charles VII. on the throne. All the world is convinced now of the truth of this maxim, that mystery generally accompanies mistrust and weakness; that the greater authority is, the more confidence and candour it should inspire; and that entrusting the provincial assemblies with part of the administration, instead of weakening it, would enlighten and render it more active. Your notables, sire, so wisely selected by your majesty, have assisted the throne with their counsels, and unveiled the long hidden countenance of truth, which you were determined to see. How happy are now the members of this assembly in presenting you, sire, with the effusions of that truth they so strongly feel in their hearts. The monarch of France can never be so great as when surrounded by his happy subjects. He has nothing to fear but the excess of their attachment. He has no other precaution to take but to be upon his guard against issuing orders that may be beyond their power to accomplish.

By a perfect union between the sovereign and the people, each party will be the gainer, and a monarch can never err in following the steps of the hero of the second race, who forced from the unanimous lips of admiring Europe the name of great, which he certainly deserved by protecting justice and his people with the same arm that struck terror to his enemies; nor those of a Charles V. whom posterity, the impartial judge of kings, has dignified with the title of wise; nor those of Louis XII. who in one of those assemblies had the sweet satisfaction of hearing himself proclaimed the father of his people; nor those in short of Henry IV. whose name, still so cherished by the French, is an honour to humanity, and daily receives from our grateful hearts a copious tribute of tears.

Your parliament, sire, waiting with impatience for the happy and wished for moment, when a just monarch will deign to spread his benign influence over a faithful nation, and grant their requests; most respectfully entreat your majesty to recall and annull the declaration of the stamp duty as altogether incompatible with the present situation of affairs; a duty, that were it to be enforced, would cause universal discontent and sorrow to all the nation, and the name of which only has already spread a general alarm through the kingdom.

Paris, Friday, July 27, 1787.

"I SHALL examine the remonstrance you sent me, and shall let you know my further intentions."

Sunday, July 29, 1787.

"Gentlemen,

"I SHALL examine, with the greatest attention, the representations of my parliament on the stamp duty, and shall immediately let you know my further intentions; but as I will not leave any uncertainty about the extent and limits of the succours that circumstances require at present, I have given proper orders, that the declaration already announced to my parliament for a territorial subsidy, (land tax) be presented to-morrow. This impost shall be proportioned to the real wants of the state, and the moment the latter ends, the former shall certainly cease. The satisfactory account of the management of the finances, I shall cause to be published every year, leaves no longer a doubt on this subject. I expect from the zeal and fidelity of my parliament, that they will proceed without the least delay to register the above declaration concerning the land tax."

The members of this undaunted assembly, (the parliament of Paris) passed on the 30th, at 6 o'clock in the evening, the following resolution: "That parliament, penetrated with an earnest desire of proving their zeal and submission to his Majesty, and of preserving the rights of the nation, and of public property—considering the present distressed situation of the finances, deprived as they are of the necessary informations so often solicited in vain, and reduced, after a peace of five years, to deliberate on a very uncommon method of levying an impost, the necessity of which is not yet proved, and its proportion to the real wants of the state by no means established; reflecting besides that the nation alone, represented by the three general states, composed of the nobility, clergy, and burgeoises legally assembled, and convinced of the necessity of imposing new duties, had a right to grant subsidies to the monarch"—they persist in their resolutions of the 16th and 24th inst. viz. "That it may please his Majesty to yield to the general will of the nation by convening the general assembly of the three states; for this purpose, proper deputies, with due respect and the usual forms, shall wait on his Majesty, humbly to intreat him to grant the suit his faithful parliament take the liberty of requesting in this present address."

This resolution was agreed upon after receiving from the Princes his Majesty's declaration of the land tax, which is not yet registered. Parliament declared the East India company to be very detrimental to the constitution. A committee was appointed to examine their affairs and privileges, and to enquire into the prevailing abuses of stock-jobbing. It is thought the former will be suppressed, and very severe laws enacted against the latter.—Sixty-three persons were deputed to present the petition for a general assembly to his Majesty at Versailles immediately, and it is likewise thought that the whole will be settled for the present to the satisfaction of both parties. His Majesty will withdraw the stamp duty, and suspend the land tax bill. A double poll tax will be levied for the space of three years, with a third twentieth. After that epoch, the King consents to assemble the three general states. The savings in the finances in the mean time will be 45 millions per annum.

The parliament of Paris since their creation, has never registered a perennial duty of any kind, without its being established, levied, or consented to, by the grand general assembly of the three states.

In order to settle the punctilious difference between the King's brother and parliament, concerning the guards, &c. that used to attend the Princes at the palace, his Majesty has ordered that they should for the future, be also accompanied by their own, alledging that the royal brothers were the representatives of Majesty itself. The court, and the revenues of the palais and the hall, are now filled with a vast number of French and Swiss guards.—Whenever his Majesty goes, all the shops that are in, and adjacent to this kind of Westminster-hall, are obliged to be shut up.

LONDON, August 31.

Extract of a letter from France, Aug. 20.

"WE fear much a general war by the preparations now making in Europe, both by sea and land. The commissaries of the different nations are very busy, and we have actually 40 000 men marching towards Givet, to sustain the states of Holland; but we are still ignorant what general is to have the command of the whole. The same number of the Emperor's troops are on their way to the Low Countries. It is yet unknown what part that Prince will take, or whether none but his own. Being so surrounded with other troops, his Austrian subjects o—ed themselves to France, but we refused to take them under our protection. In short, we all fear a general war! How terrible to Europe to have so much blood shed! God, in his infinite mercy, avert it."

A private letter from the Hague, received by a merchant in the city, says, That the troubles in Holland are increasing; the Princess of Orange was preparing to go to Berlin by the desire of the King of Prussia, where she is to stay till the disturbances have subsided. The same letter says, it is expected there, that the English and Prussian ambassadors will both be ordered home in a very short time, unless affairs assume a more favourable aspect.

Advices from Geneva, say, that many Dutch families have arrived there, who receive the utmost encouragement.

Commodore Van Kliemert has received peremptory orders from the admiralty board of Rotterdam, to sail up the Mease with a fleet of ships of war, to stop the passage of all vessels down the Rhine; and the people in the dock yards have worked night and day to get this fleet ready, tho' it is but small; the commodore's ship, the Brille, carries 24 guns.

War or peace is now the question put to every intelligent man. Which will be the case, we do not pretend positively to assert; but one thing we can assure the public, from good authority, that the cabinet of England are unanimous, and every necessary step is taking, and that 25 ships are ready to put to sea at 24 hours notice, should the dignity and honor of Great Britain require it.

Dispatches have been received from our Charges des Affairs at Madrid, stating, that should this country directly or indirectly interfere in the present disputes in Holland, she will immediately arm, in order to give every assistance to France, the only power who has any right, in her opinion, to meddle in the differences at present subsisting in Holland.

As our ministry some time ago, sent a courier to notify to the court of Madrid, our determination to support the Stadtholder; those who best know the firmness of the present cabinet, and the situation of this country, will not imagine that the resolution of the court of Spain will alter our determination.

In addition to the above, it is said that the Emperor has joined the politics of France; and that in case of hostilities commencing, the present plan of operation is, that France shall cover the Austrian Netherlands, while the King of Prussia is attacked in Silesia.

Such is the present situation of affairs—which may be looked upon as a calm preceding a storm, that must in all probability, soon break out.

Some rebellious and dangerous pamphlets are circulating in the Brabant country. "The greatest number of our clergy, says a priest, are determined to make a vigorous defence. All the villages are under arms, and the curates are their captains."

Paris at this time presents an alarming spectacle.—The apprehensions of government are so great, that every thing is under military law. A serjeant and twelve guards are stationed at the corner of of every street, to awe the rising spirit of the inhabitants.

Sept. 1. The Dutch are hastily advancing to a state that makes an accommodation of differences necessary, and this can be done only by mediation. France will not be permitted to be sole mediator. Prussia, for various reasons, is said to be improper. France and Great Britain will be the conjoint mediators alone; and something of this sort is about coming to a certainty of action.

The disagreement between the French King and his parliament has operated on their funds prodigiously, and in particular on their last loan, which before the banishment of the parliament, sold at two per cent. premium, but now sells at three per cent. discount, beside the interest of the deposit.

Several French annuities, which made part of the above loan, are failing in the same proportion. Some of these have been disposed of within these few days in Change-alley, at two per cent. discount, beside the interest of the deposit.

The private preparations for war in the different countries, are going on with all possible speed.——Various young men of fashion in France have offered their services.

So intent are the French in finishing the fortifications, and clearing the bason of Dunkirk, that no less than 3080 persons are employed on the works, and divided into two classes, one of which actually work by torch light.

LEXINGTON (Kentucky) Sept. 5.

On Monday night last a Mr. Schooler, at Harrison Station, on Licking creek, hearing something in his garden which he supposed to be horses, he went out to see, and an Indian fired at him and missed him, he immediately flew in with the Indian and laid hold of his gun, which the Indian let go and made his escape, leaving the gun with Schooler.

Sept. 7. On Wednesday last George Mason, with —— Glascock, came over Licking from the Salt-works in order to cut and draw wood, when two Indians crawled within ten steps and fired on Mason; both the shot wounded him, of which he died that night. They got some horses in the neighbourhood and went off.

We are informed there has been a meeting of the inhabitants of Henrico county, at the Mason's Hall, in Richmond, on the subject of the proposed plan of federal government, which, after having been warmly advocated by a learned gentleman of that city, was unanimously approved of.

RICHMOND, October 25.

Tuesday last the Richmond Jockey Club purse of 100 guineas, was run for and won by Actæon, the property of Dandridge Claiborne, esq. of New Kent, beating five others, after running 3 four mile heats. The purse on the day following was also won by a mare of Mr. Claiborne's.

Extract of a letter from an American Gentleman in London, dated July 17, 1787, to his Correspondent in this city.

"The additional duty on British ships, &c. laid by the last general assembly of Virginia, is, in my opinion, a wise measure, but would be much more so if it was general throughout the the United States. It has raised the value of American ships here, and they carry out most of the goods this season. It will also probably have the effect of inducing this haughty nation to condescend so far as to negociate a treaty of commerce with us.

"The disturbances of Holland become daily more serious, and it is not improbable that a general war in Europe may be the fatal consequences. Happy for America that she is at a distance from those broils."

Philadelphia, Nov. 3.

A private letter from Leyden, in Holland, of Aug. 28, informs us, "That the states general yield to the resolutions of the states of Holland, and propose to enter communicatively upon the business of stopping the troubles in the republic. The states of Holland will settle their differences without the interference of France, while disagreeable to the opposite party; but they refuse peremptorily the mediation of England, and despise the threats of Prussia. When the abolishment of the stadtholdership and his offices, by the states general, is agreed to, they will settle with them all other differences, while the patriots among the nation, the offspring of the Batavians, now the true Netherlanders, never subdued, and always unshaken in the cause of liberty, grow too powerful for a base and self-interested set of traitors. The states general dare no longer oppose them."

Other letters positively mention, that the States of Holland peremptorily refused to give any other satisfaction, as her last answer to the Baron de Thulemeyer, minister of the King of Prussia, which was, that the Princess of Orange, the wife of the Stadtholder, was detained by their particular orders, in her route to the Hague, for the safety of the community; and even instead of punishment, they commend their commissioners for their punctuality in fulfilling the high commands of their sovereign, to prevent commotions among the inhabitants, which may prove of dreadful consequences at the conjuncture of this time. They declare at the same time, that not the threats of foreign powers, nor even any resolutions of the States General, are able to make the least alterations in their last resolutions for the security of the liberty of their province, and, if possible, of the Seven United Provinces. They are plentifully supported by their fellow citizens with money, arms, and every thing necessary to withstand the enemies of the country outward, and the secret wiles of traitors inward, while they only rely upon the blessing of Heaven, the justness of their cause, and the renowned bravery of their free countrymen.

"A duel was fought here a few days ago. The first fire proved fruitless on both sides; but on the second one, one of the parties received a ball in his forehead, and expired immediately. Another duel has been fought with swords only, and one of the parties run through the body. This is the eighth person who has been killed in duels since I have lived in Carolina."

Extract of a letter, dated Venango, September 13, 1787, to a friend in Baltimore.

"A few days after my writing to you last, I formed and executed an expedition to Lake Erie. I took a large canoe with eleven people and went up the Conawango river, to a most beautiful lake, called by the Indians Chautauque. It is in some places four miles and an half wide, and in the narrowest place three quarters of a mile, and in length about twenty-five miles. We went in our canoe to the upper end, and then proceeded by land to lake Erie—The distance between these lakes is about nine miles along the path, but not more than seven on a straight line. Lake Erie makes a grand appearance, and lashes the surrounding shores with billows as large as those formed on the borders of the vast Atlantic. The sight of the human eye is bounded by the convex waters, and lost over the deep. I should think my time well spent, could I convey to you an idea of the pleasing sensations I had in this excursion. Paint to your imagination, a mighty river, pouring her waters into the Gulph of Florida; suppose this river traced up to a small stream—this stream I pursued to its source, which is lake Chautauque—then from this lake, distant only seven miles, conceive a body of fresh water, many hundreds of miles in circumference, and this lake, connected with others by water communications, into the very middle of North America. Put these circumstances together, and view the advantages which must naturally fall to the share of our posterity, and join with me in adoring the works of the great superintending Power. The United States of America have more natural advantages than any other nation under Heaven. If they judiciously turn them to their own emolument, they cannot fail of becoming both rich and powerful."

A MESSAGE from the President and Supreme Executive Council, to the General Assembly.

GENTLEMEN,

Since the last session, there has been a renewal of the disturbances at Wioming; some restless spirits there, having imagined a project of withdrawing the inhabitants of that part of this state, and some part of the state of New-York, from their allegiance, and of forming them into a new state, to be carried into effect by an armed force, in defiance of the laws of the two states. Having intelligence of this, we caused one of the principal conspirators to be apprehended, and secured in the jail of this city—and another who resided in the state of New-York, at our request has been taken up by the authority of that government. The papers found on this occasion fully discover the designs of these turbulent people, and some of their letters are herewith laid before you. The government of New-York has in this affair manifested the most friendly and neighbourly disposition towards this state, and has promised to concur with us in such future measures as may be necessary to secure the due operation of the laws, and restore quiet in those parts of both states where these irregular and ill-disposed settlers have their habitations. To protect the civil officers of our new county of Luzerne in the exercise of their respective functions, we have ordered a body of militia to hold themselves in readiness to march thither, which will be done, unless some future circumstances, and information from those parts, may make it appear unnecessary.

The sudden and unaccountable obstruction which the currency of the paper money of this state has lately met with, we earnestly recommend to your consideration, as a matter of great importance; the private interest of the citizens being very extensively affected by it, and the public in danger of suffering a loss, in its revenue of excise, duties, taxes, &c proportionate to any depreciation the paper money may be attended with. Perhaps it may be advisable to put a stop to the further re-emissions on loan, which are permitted by law as it now stands.

We would likewise recommend to your consideration the subject of a law to regulate the fees of the various offices of this state, especially those of the Executive and Judicial departments.

The lowering the price of the lands in the new purchase, we now think necessary, it being very evident they will not sell till this takes place; at the same time we are of opinion, it would be of advantage to the state, if those who become purchasers had an exemption from taxes for several years, as it would be an encouragement to the people to become purchasers.

Since the expiration of the law for granting lands to the officers and soldiers of the Pennsylvania line, a number of applications have been made to us by persons who were entitled, but for want of information did not apply in time; we therefore recommend it to your honorable house to pass a law, granting a further time for those people to come in and draw for their lands.

Sundry dispatches we have received from Congress, are herewith communicated.

BENJAMIN FRANKLIN.

Council Chamber, Philadelphia, October 27, 1787.

STATE OF NEW-JERSEY.

HOUSE of ASSEMBLY, Oct. 26, 1787.

Resolved unanimously, That it be recommended to such of the inhabitants of this state as are entitled to vote for representatives in General Assembly, to meet in their respective counties on the fourth Tuesday in November next, at the several places fixed by law for holding the annual elections, to chuse three suitable persons to serve as delegates from each county in a state convention, for the purposes herein before mentioned, and that the same be conducted agreeably to the mode, and conformably with the rules and regulations prescribed for conducting such elections.

Resolved unanimously, That the persons so elected to serve in state convention, do assemble and meet together on the second Tuesday in December next, at Trenton, in the county of Hunterdon, then and there to take into consideration the aforesaid constitution; and if approved of by them, finally to ratify the same in behalf & on the part of this state; and make report thereof to the United States in Congress assembled, in conformity with the resolution thereto annexed.

Resolved, That the Sheriffs in the respective counties of this state shall be, and they are hereby required to give as timely notice as may be, by advertisements to the people of their counties, of the time, place and purpose of holding elections as aforesaid.

WHEN love hath charm'd the virgin's ear,
She hides the tender thought in vain,
How oft a blush, a sigh, a tear,
Betray the sweetly-anxious pain!

For thee a mutual flame I own,
Thy joy, thy sorrow both are mine;
Thy virtues all my soul have won,
That boasts a passion pure as thine.

No more shalt thou my coldness mourn,
I trust the tear that dims thine eye;
I see fair Truth thy lip adorn,
And hear her voice in ev'ry sigh.

From the (Boston) INDEPENDENT CHRONICLE.

To every Politician, of every condition, outs & ins, and those that never were in, nor ever will be,

HARK 'E!

GOOD folks love peace and harmony; we are sick of all sorts of newspaper wrangling——"ship news"—letters to and from "Shays and Shattuck"—abusing past and present rulers, &c. &c. &c. Now is the time to let patience and sober reason, have their perfect work—for we have a great work to do, an empire of freedom to build and perpetuate. This is the twelfth year of our national age, and we are a sturdy youth, but have all the levities natural to our age, and therefore we must put on our "considering caps"——Let us one and all lay aside the sin of wrangling, which "so easily besets us," and seek every one the things that make for peace and union. Let all the states act like brethren of one good family—every one regarding the interest of his brother—and then will every one be prosperous and happy. In the whole creation cannot be found a people so highly favored of GOD; nor in the volume of ages, can we find a nation, at our age, so great. The eyes of the world are upon us: The wealth, the learning, and the people of the East, are bending their course to this new world. In this fertile region of peace and plenty, under the serene sky of virtuous freedom, and encircled with the beneficent smiles of the KING ETERNAL, the pinions of HOPE cannot rise too high! Is it in human folly, can it be in the heart of Americans to disagree upon the National Government, after their wise and tried Patriots have laboured four long months to form one to make them happy? HOPE replies, they will not hesitate to adopt the system:—FEAR trembles, and lisps, and stammers;—JEALOUSY says, beware of the snake in the grass;—OLD CONTINENTAL HONOUR OF 1775, bids us confide in each other as brethren, and mend the system hereafter, if experience should discover that emendations were necessary;—COMMON-SENSE, observes, that as we cannot exist without a National Government, and distrust is the canker-worm that corrodes the tender cords of the Union—this bane of society, should be guarded against as the poison of ASPS—as a cancer at the heart: THIS has been the evil genius of America.—But may the Powers above, point their lightning against all political and moral vices, until our minds are pure as the light,—and write, with a sun-beam, UNION upon our souls!

EZEKIEL.

From a Correspondent.

The necessity of our efficient federal government to render the United States respectable as a nation, has been urged by many real, and opposed by some pretended friends—Let us attend to what those, who do not even pretend to wish us well, say on this subject.

Extract from the European Magazine for November, 1784, page 339, under the title—Political State of the Nation.

"NORTH-AMERICA, broken off from the British empire, in other words, become independent, begins to be a kind of a vacuum in the system of politics; a remote region, unattended to by the European powers: And if Great Britain will but punish those revolted colonies with a total disregard, and perfect indifference, they will soon grow as light as chaff in the great scale of power and consequence among nations.——Already they find a necessity of adopting the Turkish mode of negociating peace with their inland neighbours, by sending ambassadors of peace guarded with an armed force!—This may do for the Turkish empire, great and potent as it is; but for Congress, a government without substantial power, without money, and without property, it will never do long! A slippery false peace it will be, kept only by the Indians while the peace-makers and their warlike retinue are in sight, or within call. Even now the finew states, boasted to be in future the greatest empire in the world, begin, like wolves, to worry and devour one another, for want of a superintending governing power, to hold an equal regulating hand over them all; and most grievously will they lament the loss of their dependence on Great Britain."

Foreign Intelligence.

UTRECHT, August 8.

HOLLAND, which has but too just reasons not to trust the intentions either of the stadtholder, his council, or any of those who embrace the party of his highness, neglects no means in its power to put the troops in its pay on a respectable footing, for which reason they have already formed a camp of 700 or 800 men near Woerden.

August 29.

It is now four years since, by a solemn resolution of the states general, the high council of war was abolished throughout the republic, as a tribunal dangerous to the sovereignty of the states, and to the safety of the citizens, and introduced clandestinely by the captain general, in order to monopolize the military jurisdiction to the state. The province of Guelderland is now about to re-establish this council, and have even proposed to Holland, and the other confederates to follow their example. This absurdity of the proposal does not require to be pointed out.

LEYDEN, August 30.

The violent means to which the stadtholderian party has had recourse, appears to animate the patriots either to conquer or die. The city of Bois le Duc has formally refused to disarm its burgesses.

HAGUE, August 11.

The French ambassador has received a courier from the prime minister at Paris, with dispatches of great importance, and which the messenger was but 48 hours in bringing from Paris. At the same time a courier was sent from Paris to Berlin, no doubt with dispatches of equal importance.

CORK, September 6.

Within these few weeks a commission was received here from America for the purchase of Osnaburghs to a very considerable amount; but could not be executed, as the establishment of that manufacture in this kingdom had been prevented by a combination of the linen weavers. Can we pretend to liberty, if we continue slaves to a drunken, selfish, ill-principled rabble?

LONDON, July 12.

On Tuesday in the King's Bench, a very interesting cause came on; an action brought by a distiller against a publican for the value of a pipe of gin. The case was as follows: the distiller had trusted a person to sell spirits by commission, & this commission-man had sold the liquor to the defendant, and received the money, which he had not paid to his employer. The question therefore was to determine, whether the distiller had not given the credit to the publican; several witnesses were produced to prove, that a middle man was not empowered to receive the money, and others gave evidence to the contrary. The judge observed, that where a person was employed to sell by commission, it followed of course that he was empowered to receive the bill for the goods which he himself sold. The judge and jury being of one opinion, a verdict was given for the defendant.

The people of England ought to look into, and examine the state of their navy:—Can there be a circumstance more alarming to this country, than the extraordinary length of time that has elapsed since orders were issued for equipping a squadron of six ship of the line? The orders were given on the seventh of last June, and this is the twelfth of July; a period of thirty-five days! Yet our fleet is not ready for sea!

In somewhat less than half of the time, a fleet of sixteen sail of the line were made ready for sea at Brest. Eight of them have already sailed; and the others are fit for service at an hour's notice. While Great Britain (O shame to tell!) cannot, how pressing soever an occasion may occur, face that force with half the number!

August 16.

Extract of a letter from Copenhagen, July 15.

"A vessel that came away the 2d of June from Patrix Fior in Iceland, has brought a letter from lieutenant Egede, who sailed with M. Rothe upon the discovery of Ancient Greenland. This letter, dated May 31, informs us, that as M. Egede was steering his course last year towards the coasts on this continent, which he thought to be that of Ancient Greenland, he found amongst the ice an aperture which he had got into, and through which he had advanced to the latitude of 65 degrees, being stopped by a mass of Ice, which seemed solid, he got upon it to observe the land, which, according to his reckoning was not above 7 or 8 common French leagues off; but a furious tempest arose, which obliged him to re-embark; he retired quickly by the same channel, through the ice, to save the vessel from being dashed to pieces against it.

This officer adds, he was going to make another attempt to get to the land he had discovered, being resolved either to penetrate into it or perish. All navigators agree that the success of this enterprise depends upon the vigilance and good fortune of the navigators in seizing the time when those northern seas are most free from ice."

Wednesday afternoon some dispatches were received from New Callabar, which are dated the eighth of June: they contain an account of the arrival there of eight sail of merchant-ships from Liverpool, two of which had lost their main and mizen-masts in a gale of wind four days before they arrived; that 12 sail of ships sailed from the coast with upwards of 1000 slaves on board, bound to Jamaica and the Leeward Islands, the 1st of June.

August 25. We have every reason to believe that a Congress has been proposed to our court, which, after much deliberation, has been accepted. We cannot learn the particulars of this agreeable intelligence, but are happy to announce so pacific a disposition on the part of France, which bids fair to produce an amicable adjustment of all the differences now subsisting in Holland, and probably to preserve the peace of Europe for a great number of years.

The French king's subjects are nobly struggling for liberty; it is instilled into the minds of their infants, and when this kid has grown to proper strength, that monster Tyranny, under which the earth has long groaned, will probably receive another blow by the emancipation of the sons of Gallia from slavery.

Extract of a letter from Rome, August 1.

"On the 5th of this month there happened the following curious incident, which has been a subject of amusement to all the city. About eleven o'clock in the evening, a tall portly lady was seen walking on foot upon the Corso, having a large turban upon her head trimmed with gauze, and dressed in a habit for a Gala; supported by two 'squires, preceded by two lacqueys, and followed by a page, who supported her train. This courtly exhibition excited the curiosity a of great number of people, but respect hindered them from approaching too near; at length the throng increased, and grew more curious and impertinent, until they discovered that the lady with her turban, was nothing but an ass, dressed in this fashion, whose two fore feet were supported by the two squires before. Some ladies of rank have been very much dissatisfied with this piece of pleasantry, and made a complaint of it to the magistrates."

September 3.

Extract of a letter from the Hague, August 25.

"The states general continue to hold their assemblies in this city: There was, however, an assembly held the 15th of this month at Nimeguen, but from the paucity of the members, the stadtholderians themselves are ashamed to mention it; a few nobles of Gueldres, Friesland, and Amersfort, composed that pretended assembly, which, according to appearances will not sit again. But in return, the usual deputies at the Hague redouble their violence and obstinacy in the measures they take against the patriotic provinces. They have carried their animosity so far, as to forbid the entrance and passage through the towns of the generality, of any French soldiers; and have resolved, that a serious conference shall be held with the French ambassador, respecting the introduction of some artillerists arrived from France under the name of deserters; it is certain, if this be true, that the French ministry know nothing of it, and that these men are, in fact, deserters.

"Discord at length prevails in the most open manner between the prince and the states of Amersfort. According to our private advices, it was occasioned by his highness having finally insisted that the city of Utrecht should be attacked, and the states of Amersfort, the greatest part of whose members have possessions in the said city having formally opposed it. The prince, greatly dissatisfied, ended the dispute by quitting Amersfort, and is returned to Nimeguen with his whole retinue; which seems to announce, that he does not intend to come back there, at least for some time. Nevertheless, as all this may perhaps be only a feint, the garrison of Utrecht are more on their guard than ever.

"Division also reigns in the states of Holland; the Equestrian corps protest in the strongest manner against every thing deliberated, and resolved by the cities; the majority of these latter have lately lost two votes, which makes an essential difference in the course of affairs. But as the wealthiest and most preponderant are agreed, and entirely determined to pursue their system, there cannot be a doubt formed respecting their political operations, however slow they may be, through the opposition of the members attached to the stadtholderian principles.

"Within these few days, the garrison of Utrecht has been augmented by about 2600 men, 300 artillerists; and advanced works have been raised, which render the city impregnable by an army so small as that which threatens it. The engineers, who are constantly at work, assure, that the city might now hold out against 20,000 men.

"The news is certain, that two Prussian regiments are arrived at Cleves; several others are expected there, but they are to be cantoned in the environs without going farther. The project of the king of Prussia is to form a camp of about 10,000 men in the quarter of Gueldres that belongs to him, in order to give weight to the mediation that his majesty desires to effectuate in favour of the house of Orange.

"A great fermentation reigns at the Hague, where, in fact, there is less safety than any where else, for which reason the Burgher camp of Woerden has drawn nearer to us to come to the assistance of this place on the first signal of an alarm.

"It appears that Holland will absolutely acknowledge no other mediator than the king of France. They are preparing, for next week, an answer to the memorial of the king of Prussia.

"The states general have forbidden to recruit for the province of Holland, in the countries of the generality; and they have given orders to stop the French engineers that may even be furnished with passports for Holland."

The French tariff of their new stamp tax contains an article which ought to have been remonstrated against by the English ambassador. It is, that no person shall leave that kingdom without a passport from the minister, and this passport must have a guinea stamp. How many British sailors are there, or may there be in France, who on a sudden emergency cannot return home for want of a guinea to pay their "prison fees."

The last courier from Rochelle, brought the unwelcome intelligence to Versailles, that Mr. D—— who held the offices of treasurer of the navy, and of the war department, with several other lucrative employments, had taken his flight; leaving behind him a deficiency of two millions four hundred thousand livres.

A report prevails at the West end of the town, that 12 sail of the line sailed from Spithead on Thursday evening.

The mails which arrived yesterday bring nothing new respecting the affairs of Holland. The letters and reports are not quite so favourable on the side of peace as the former ones. The patriots however, have dropped much of their language; and diffident of their own power, they rather seem to depend on the assistance of the French king, trusting that the king of Prussia will not take an active part in favor of the stadtholder, while the king of France remains in the mind to retaliate.

Le Count de St. Priest, ancient ambassador at Constantinople, is appointed by his Christian majesty at the Hague, in the room of the marquis de Verac, who is suddenly and unexpectedly recalled.

Extract of a letter from the Hague, Aug. 28.

Extract of the ADDRESS of the Equestrian Order, and the Nobility of Holland, to the Assembly of their Noble and Grand Powers, upon the last Memorial of Monsieur de Thulemeyer, Envoy Extraordinary from his Prussian Majesty.

"The lords of the equestrian order having already declared their sentiments in their address of the 7th and 10th of July, would be content to repeat their protestations of innocence respecting the disasters of their unfortunate country, which, abused by deceitful allusion, is verging to ruin; but they find themselves compelled to represent again to your noble and grand powers the true picture of this province, once so flourishing and happy, and the object of the envy and admiration of all nations.

"The equestrian body having proposed their advice to this illustrious assembly on the 7th, flattered themselves that the objects which they then glanced at, would have been seen and considered in all the extent of which they were capable.

"Upon the 10th, when you deliberated on the memorial of M. de Thulemeyer, the equestrian order, repeated their instances and advice of the 7th, touching the absolute necessity of concerting conciliatory measures for the prevention of the consequences which then threatened.

"The equestrian body has not had the satisfaction to see their advice followed by any salutary effect, but by an answer to the memorial, from which no good could be expected. This was such, as experience has demonstrated, that the danger of the republic is now arrived at the greatest height, and its situation almost without resource.

"We say, without resource, thinking that term is not too expressive, but founded on truths which are unanswerable.

"But the equestrian body will not consent to render the inhabitants of Holland the victims or actions which violate the rights of nature and of nations, which destroy liberty, and provoke the vengeance of those who will execute it by means of arms. And what defence can we institute?—Shall we find it in concord? That has fled, and cannot be re-established, without the assistance of the Almighty.

"Shall we find the means in the power of the finances of Holland? Who among the members of your noble and grand powers is ignorant of their deplorable state? The last negociation for five millions made by Holland, is a proof of it most convincing.

"You have only to consider the enormous loss of 22 per cent. and that negociation cost sixteen hundred thousand florins to the country; the actual price also of oligations, the diminution of the value of effects, the enormous expences which take place in an arbitrary manner in this country, by a commission which has a power dictatorial, free, and unresponsible, and without bounds, upon the treasury of the country.

"Finally, shall we find it in commerce? This source is entirely exhausted; and words are wanting to express its deplorable state.

"Is it to be found in the assistance of our confederates, or in that of foreign powers? The answer to this point is so delicate and embarrassing, that the equestrian body are afraid to commit themselves.

"They repeat their advice of the 10th of July, for conciliatory measures, &c."

ALBANY, October 25.

Extract of a letter from a member of the legislature of the state of Connecticut, to his friend in New-York, dated New-Haven, October 1787.

"I have the pleasure to inform you that on Tuesday last the doings and recommendations of the convention of the United States was laid before the house of assembly of this state; after being read, a bill was prepared, taken into consideration, and passed by a full vote, appointing the second Tuesday in November next to be the day for the several towns in this state to chuse their delegates to the state convention, which is to meet at Hartford on the first Thursday in January next, to take up, advise and determine, whether this state approve and accept the new system of fœderal government. Thus far the new government has met with general approbation in Connecticut, and from the present disposition of the people to support order and good government, there is no doubt but it will be adopted by this state."

NEW-YORK, Nov. 1.

Extract of a letter from Charleston, Sept. 25.

"A few days ago a countryman enquiring in King-street for the best bar-iron warehouse, a waggish young gentleman undertook to conduct him to the cheapest in town, and carried him to the new prison, at which place he was shewn some of the iron barred rooms, with an intimation that those sort of warehouses had all the run of business at present; at the same time several of the prisoners insisted on receiving a small sum of money for garnish.—The countryman complied with all that was asked of him, but being one of those sour, irascible mortals whom it is much safer to laugh with, than at, went back immediately to the store where his kind conductor resided, and imprinted on his rueful visage some marks of gratitude that will not easily be erased, and will no doubt teach him the propriety of an adage—all is well that ends well."

On Saturday the give and take purse of thirty pounds, was won by Mr. Brooke's horse Cincinnatus.

Last Saturday night some villains went into the store of Mr. Jonah Thompson, Fairfax-street, by help of false keys, and robbed it of a considerable quantity of merchandise.

On Monday evening as a barber was walking in one of the streets near the water; he was stopped by several villains, one of whom clapped a pistol to his breast and demanded his money, which they took from him.——They then struck him several times on the head with the but of the pistol and buised him very much.——The same night a waggoner was stopped near the church by some footpads and robbed of what money he had about him, his hat, &c.

FREDERICKSBURG, Oct. 25.

At a meeting of the Freeholders and Inhabitants of the town of Fredericksburg, on Saturday, the 19th of October, 1787.

JAMES SOMERVILLE was chosen President.

A COPY of the constitution which the convention framed, and submitted to the United States in Congress assembled, being read, and unanimously approved of; thereupon, It was Resolved, To draw up instructions to JAMES MUNROE, and JOHN DAWSON, Esquires, delegates of the county of Spotsylvania. The following is a copy of what was prepared, read, and approved of, and signed by every inhabitant present:

At a meeting of the Freeholders and Inhabitants of Fredericksburg, on the 19th day of October, 1787.

THE fœderal constitution being read and maturely considered, it was unanimously approved of, and resolved, that our delegates for the county of Spotsylvania should be instructed in the following words:

To John Dawson and James Munroe, Esquires.

WE, the freeholders and inhabitants of the town and corporation of Fredericksburg, convinced of the inefficacy of our present form of government and of the propriety of immediately adopting the system of government recommended by the general Convention of the United States; and that the safety, prosperity and happiness of Virginia, as well as the other states, depend greatly thereon:—We, therefore, direct you, our representatives, to declare, that this is the opinion of your constituents in this corporation; and that we request an immediate recommendation may be made from the legislature of this state, to submit the same to a convention of delegates, chosen by the freeholders thereof, in conformity to the resolves of the convention in that case made and provided.

PETERSBURG, Oct. 25.

At a meeting of a number of the inhabitants of the town of Petersburg and its vicinity, at Mr. Hare's tavern, on Wednesday, October 24, 1787, to take into consideration the Federal Constitution, proposed by the late Grand Convention.

Colonel BANISTER, in the Chair.

THE proposed Constitution was read.—Whereupon it was resolved unanimously,

That being fully impressed with the incompetency of the powers of Congress for the essential objects of government, and feeling the absolute necessity of an immediate review and amendment of the confederation, this meeting with much satisfaction beheld a general convention of deputies assembled for that purpose composed of characters the most distinguished for experience, abilites, and integrity.

That sensible as we are of the vast difficulty of forming such a plan of government, as shall at once combine the diversity of interests, and secure the rights of the respective states, subject to the general controul of one sovereign authority, we view with admiration and gratitude, the wisdom, unanimity and magnanimous spirit of accommodation, diſplayed by the late convention in the proſecution of the arduous object of their appointment.

That a work of ſuch momentous import, framed by our beſt and wiſeſt characters, upon the moſt ample deliberation and diſcuſſion, and founded upon the moſt enlarged principles and extenſive information, deſerves to be received with every mark of conſideration and reſpect; and we are anxiouſly deſirous that a ſtate convention be immediately called as we conceive every delay unworthy of the magnitude of the object, and incompatible with the urgency of our public affairs.

That we approve of the propoſed plan of the federal conſtitution, as formed to cement the union of the ſtates—to eſtabliſh vigor and confidence in government; to extend an uniform adminiſtration of juſtice; to promote the general intereſts of commerce; and to ſecure reſpect abroad and peace at home; and that ſhould it even be ſuppoſed that in ſome leſſer matters the excluſive intereſt of this ſtate may not have been particularly conſidered, yet we are free to declare, that we have not any poſſible hope, that under the circumſtances of the ſeveral ſtates, a better federal conſtitution can ever be obtained; nor have we any the ſmalleſt expectation that the like exertion of ſuch eminent qualifications can ever again be commanded for a ſimilar purpoſe; deeming it certain, that there remains now for the United States this only alternative, either by a ſpeedy adoption of the propoſed conſtitution, to become a great and reſpectable nation, or by rejecting it, to precipitate the diſſolution of the union, expoſed to inſult and contempt, from without, to wars and diſſentions from within.

That theſe reſolutions be forwarded to the delegates of Dinwiddie and Prince George, who are requeſted to uſe their influence for immediately calling a convention to be held at as early a day as circumſtances will poſſibly admit.

Philadelphia, Nov. 5.

Extract of a letter from Savannah, Georgia, Sept. 27.

"We are informed by a gentleman from Wilkes county, that laſt Friday fe'nnight a Mr. Beardin was killed by the Indians, about two miles from Greenſborough; that next day a boy was ſhot through the heart near Shoulderbone; his ſiſter, about 12 years of age, was alſo wounded and ſcalped at the ſame time, but was able to crawl home, and there were hopes of her recovery."

On Monday laſt a Portugueſe ſailor was murdered in Water ſtreet, and ſeveral of the crew belonging to a veſſel lately arrived from Briſtol, have been committed to the gaol of this city on ſuſpicion that they were the perpetrators of this barbarous action.

From the ſcarcity of buſineſs, it is expected that the preſent ſeſſion of the general aſſembly will be the ſhorteſt that has yet ſat. No bills of an important public nature have yet been offered to the attention of the houſe.

A correſpondent is happy to obſerve, that Dr. Franklin is in the liſt of perſons propoſed for the ſtate convention, ſince it is thought neceſſary to introduce a member of the federal convention to explain the new plan of government. His worth as a patriot, and his wiſdom as a politician, entitle him to that diſtinction; and as he enjoys the unbounded confidence of his fellow citizens, it is hoped that no perſonal conſideration will induce him to wave this important ſervice at ſo critical a juncture.

The firſt, and only gift that makes us bleſt,
Is our own fancy'd thoughts of being free,
And catch one glance of thee, dear LIBERTY.

Hail! heav'n-born goddeſs, whoſe extended hand
Pour'd down each bleſſing on this happy land;
Redeem'd thy ſons from tyranny's curſt chain,
And turn'd each Briton's ſon the world's diſdain:
Taught us to know our dear-bought freedom's worth,
(The firſt and laſt of bleſſings upon earth)
The faireſt proſpect op'ning to our view
From whence inceſſant pleaſures ſpring anew.

Britons, reflect!—ah, think upon the paſt,
Thy once great name feels now a gen'ral blaſt;
Thy fleets no more on foaming billows glide,
For know, Columbia's ſons can check thy pride.
Tho' Marlbro's arm upheld thy boaſted fane,
When blood and havock rag'd on Blenheim's plain;
Tho' Cumberland's Duke, with greatneſs and renown
Plac'd the Third George beneath a Britiſh crown;
Yet Monmouth's plains around thee terror ſprung,
And o'er Columbia's ſons bright triumph hung!

Hail! happy heroes—offsprings of the ſkies,
Whoſe virtues o'er thy ſtrength ſuperior riſe;
Whoſe love for freedom call'd thee to the field,
And taught tyrannic rulers how to yield;
Taught them themſelves to know, and own to thee,
That that which conquer'd them ſhall keep them free,
Shall keep thy faith inviolate as thy cauſe,
To follow nature's paths and nature's laws;
Make thee the wonder yet of time to come,
And own Columbia ONLY rival'd Rome.

ANECDOTE.

SHUTER the comedian being in company one evening with a very parſimonious character, who nevertheleſs at times affected pleaſantry, who was ſhewing a curious ſnuff-box to the company, and being aſked what it was made of, replied, the rind of Cheſhire cheeſe. That's a l—, anſwered Shuter. Why ſo poſitive, Ned? replied another that ſat by: you have not ſeen the box. What if I have not, ſaid he, I ſay, if his box had been made of the rhine of Cheſhire cheeſe, he would have eat it long ago.

LONDON.

Aug. 10. In the Tartar from Greenland, which is just come up, the following circumstance is noticeable. Having received some damage amongst the ice, she was turned up on the ice, and the damage was repaired while she lay there. This is said to be the first experiment that ever was tried of the kind.

As a remarkable instance of the vicissitudes of human fortunes, it is not unworthy of notice, that Ashton Smith, formerly an Esquire, and possessed of a fortune of 1500l. per annum, is now the common driver of the Manchester Commercial Stage Coach: and the memorable Lady Ligonier (now Mrs. Brown) was one of his passengers to Manchester on Sunday se'nnight.

The following singular and providential escape deserves to be recorded.—During one of the late violent thunder storms, a party who were met at the house of a gentleman of the first rank in the county of Limerick, pushed about the bottle with so much celerity, that one of the company, tired with the fatigue of the evening, stole off to bed. His friends soon missed him, determined una voce, that it was dishonourable for an Irishman to retreat from his bottle, and resolved to bring him back to his duty; for which laudable purpose the whole party ran up to his bed chamber, dragged him out of bed, wrapped him up in his dressing gown, bore him in triumph to the head of the table, and placed him in the president's chair. At the moment this was done, a violent flash of lightning struck through the roof of the house, perforated the different floors, passed through the centre of the bed which the gentleman had the moment before quitted, to the cellar, where it made a deep hole.

The following very odd affair came some years past before Sir John Fielding:——A soldier in the guards being suddenly observed with a silver watch, his serjeant interrogated him about it, and received for answer, that, going into a public house, he won it at a raffle. The man, however, having an ill character, this did not satisfy the serjeant, he therefore secretly sent some of his comrades to question him; to one he said, it was made a present to him by a relation; to another, that he saw a damned circumcised Jew sleeping in the park, and picked it out of his pocket. These contrary accounts occasioned him to be taken up. Before Sir John Fielding, he first said he won it at a raffle; but the Justice asking him, whether he was certain he had not received it as a present from a relation? He immediately said (being an Irishman) that upon his soul and conscience, his Worship had guessed the whole truth of the matter that a relation had given it him sure enough. The Justice then asked him if he was sure he had not stole it from a damned circumcised Jew? Upon which he answered, that upon his salvation, he could not tell whether he had or not, for he was drunk when he got it. On examining the watch and maker of it, it was found to belong to a person who had been some days missing. The soldier was therefore committed to prison on suspicion of having robbed and murdered him.

AMERICA.

NORTHAMPTON, October 24.

INSTRUCTIONS of the town of Chesterfield, in the county of Hampshire, and commonwealth of Massachusetts, to Col. BENJAMIN BONNEY, their Representative in the Great and General Court of said commonwealth.

SIR,

YOU are chosen to represent this town, in the Great and General Court of this commonwealth, in tumultuous, and unsettled times; in times also, where judicial dispensations of the holy government are in execution, on this state, which evidently indicates some heinous cause; either in a general abuse of divine benignity, or in particular breach of faith, and violence of most sacred bonds; we wish you, sir, to fix your eye in the public indications, and labour to trace out the malignant cause; and then that you urge such measures to be adopted as may remove the cause, and so occasion the distressful effects to cease.

Our remote situation from the center of public operations, deprives us of that knowledge of them, which would be necessary for our being very particular in our instructions to you on this occasion.

Permit us therefore, sir, only to refresh your memory by suggesting a few objects, to which we insist you should closely attend, as,

1st. That you not only make strict justice the inviolable rule of all your exertions in your present public capacity; but that you particularly exert yourself to detect the cause and source of a public reproach on the state, viz. that there is no confidence to be placed in its promises; and then that you labour in all your motions, to extricate it from the scandal.

2d. That you impress your mind very deeply with just views, of the absolute importance of the rigorous and successful prosecution of husbandry and fishery, to the general emolument of the state, and the honour, happiness, and prosperity of all its inhabitants; and that you keep it in your eye, that the industrious in these two branches are the support of the commonwealth, and of course, that the whole weight of your influence may be for the ease in encouragement of the labouring part of the community, and for the general use, and improvement of our own manufactures; and for this purpose we enjoin on you to move and urge, that taxes be less on polls, and estates, and increased on all luxurious superfluities; that virtue, industry, and frugality may be encouraged; and idleness, foppery, and effeminating luxury, may be discouraged and avoided.

3d. It is apprehended, and we suppose on good ground, that the commonwealth has done much more than its proportion in the late war; and if so, we endure the burthen of debt which ought in part to be borne by other states in the union; we direct you sir, to scrutinize this affair, and if it appears to be fact, that you move for our delegates in Congress to be called upon, to investigate the whole affair, and settle this state's just proportion; that in future we may not be subjected to a demand for more than our just part of the national debt.

4th. Whereas the state of New York hath refused to concur with other states in federal measures, and some other states, induced (perhaps) by that example, have neglected it, by which the public finances are extremely deranged; and whereas the traders in these western counties of the state, deal much at New York, so their duties and imposts, drawn from this state, are constantly to the emolument of that state, so that state accumulates wealth and is aggrandized at our expence. Now as a means of redress of these unequal, and injurious circumstances, we enjoin it on you, sir, to insist on additional duties and imposts on all importations, (of foreign articles) from such delinquent states into this state; so that our wealth may be no longer transferred to balance the debt of other states, to the impoverishment of this.

5th. As a revision of the confederation of the United States, is now on the carpet, the plan of which perhaps may be laid before the general court, we enjoin it on you, sir, not only to exercise a faithful patronage and guardianship to the dear bought liberties of the people; but also to keep an attentive regard to all the great national objects, by which Divine Providence has dignified our land, and to which we are solemnly bound to give the most watchful and zealous attention.

CHARLESTON, (S. C.) Oct. 12.

Yesterday came on at the court of general sessions, the trial of Thomas Jones, for a street robbery on the person of Mr. Aaron Lopez. Mr. Lopez deposed, that he was going home on the 19th of August, about eleven o'clock at night; just at the French church the prisoner and Macguire came up, and demanded his money, Jones holding a cocked pistol to his breast: being under apprehension of danger, he gave them about twenty-five shillings in paper money, but this did not satisfy Macguire, who rudely searched for more, and took a gold breast pin and some small silver: The prisoner then insisted that the witness should go with them which he refused, asking what more could be expected, when they had got all he had? During this altercation Mr. Snowden came up, when they began a story of having been robbed, and that the witness was one of the robbers. Other persons gathering round, they slacked in their accusations, and soon after went away. The witness then informed the persons present of what had happened, who immediately agreed to pursue the thieves, and they were soon after taken.

Mr. Snowden saw Mr. Lopez in custody of Macguire, who talked about money that had been taken; the prisoner holding a pistol cocked in his hand. This witness corroborated the latter part of the testimony given by the preceding one.

The prisoner had nothing to offer in his defence, and the jury without hesitation found him guilty.

Mary Butler was indicted for stealing a negro fellow, named Sam, the property of Mr. Pleym.

William Nix was overseer to Mr. Pleym for his plantation at Oakforest. On the 25th of June Sam, another negro fellow, and two horses were missing. About two days after he went in pursuit, for some time without success, until he came to Ogechee, where had been a negro shot in the arm, who, however escaped. The prisoner was washing her cloaths in a kitchen, and he asked her who the negro was, she replied his name was Sam Clark, but finding who the witness came from, she said it was Pleym's Sam; that they had lived two years together; that he was the man she loved, and for whose sake she was willing to lose her life; that she waited near Oakforest until the two negroes came with horses to go off. Their plan was to get amongst the Indians or Spaniards.

The court had requested Mr. Smith to be counsel for the prisoner, and that gentleman exerted himself to induce the jury to fix a value on the negro below 40s. which would reduce the crime to petty larceny, but the court did not think this case admitted a jury to exercise any other discretionary power than that of finding guilty or not guilty. Indeed it was to be lamented that in the present instance, where a young creature had so far debased herself as to avow a licentious passion for a slave, that she could not be punished by a good flogging. The jury found her not guilty.

She was a second time indicted for receiving two horses, knowing them to be stolen, and convicted. The court ordered her to be whipped, to stand an hour in the pillory, and pay one shilling fine.

Mary Boyle was convicted of petty larceny, and ordered to be whipped.

WILMINGTON, Oct. 31.

On Monday the 22d instant, agreeable to law, the General Assembly of this state met at Dover, but a sufficient number of the members not attending, the house adjourned from day to day till Wednesday, when a quorum being assembled, the House of Assembly proceeded to business; and elected Thomas Rodney, Esquire, Speaker, and James Booth, Esquire, Clerk. They then ordered a convention to be called for taking into consideration the plan of government recommended by the late Fœderal Convention; the election to be held at the usual place in each county, on the third Monday of this month; and the convention to meet at Dover on the next Monday thereafter.

Some of the members chosen for Sussex attended, but the sheriff not having made any return, they did not take their seats.

Friday last arrived here the brig Polly and Betsey, captain T. Fort, from St. Eustatius.

Philadelphia, Nov. 6.

At a very numerous meeting of the Freemen of the city of Philadelphia at the State-House on Saturday evening, the 3d instant, the following ticket was agreed on for the election, to be held this day, for the members of the ensuing state convention:

Thomas M'Kean
James Wilson
Benjamin Rush
Hilary Baker
George Latimer.

The most remarkable unanimity appeared on the occasion, not one name being offered to the meeting in opposition. The gentlemen in nomination had previously, and have since declared their conviction, that it is necessary for the safety, happiness and preservation of liberty and good government of the United States, that the new plan of federal government, as proposed by the late honorable Convention, should be adopted without alteration or delay.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY.

Wednesday, October 31.

THE house met pursuant to adjournment.

A petition from Mary Bioren, regretting her unsuccessful applications to the house, and praying that a committee might be appointed to enquire into her case, and several other petitions of a private nature were presented and ordered to lie on the table.

The committee on the requisition of Congress for raising 700 troops, reported a resolution, that a committee be appointed to bring in a bill for that purpose, which was adopted, and a committee appointed accordingly.

The committee appointed to confer with council on the disturbances in the county of Luzerne reported in part, a resolution that the executive council be authorised and requested to apply for the consent of Congress, that any number of troops not exceeding 500 should be raised and enlisted by this state for preserving the peace of the said county of Luzerne. Mr. M'Lean observed, that it might be proper to lay before the house, the papers which had been delivered to the committee by council as an inducement to their report; and accordingly extracts of sundry letters addressed to col. Timothy Pickering, were read by the clerk, from which it appeared, that there was great reason to doubt the sincerity of the insurgents in their professions of allegiance to the state, as they were taking measures for rendering their opposition effectual at the moment that they declared for subjection and peace.—The necessity of sending some force (which it was the secret object of Franklin's party to prevent, or at least, to delay, 'till they were prepared for hostilities) in order to protect the friends of government, was urged, and in the mean time it was deemed improper, and unsafe for col. Pickering to return, as he was known to be the object of retaliation for any severity shewn to Franklin.

The clerk was proceeding to read some other papers, when Mr. Peters stated the impropriety of making public the names of those who furnished government with information while they were within the power of the persons affected by that information. Upon this the house agreed that enough had been heard to evince the expediency of the resolution recommended by the committee, which was unanimously adopted.

The executive council being now introduced into the assembly chamber, the ballot for a president and vice-president took place, and his excellency Benjamin Franklin was unanimously chosen president, and the hon. Peter Muhlenberg vice-president for the ensuing year. The members of the house and of the executive council attended by the public officers, militia, and citizens, then walked in procession to the court-house, where the president and vice-president elect were proclaimed, and his excellency Benjamin Franklin declared captain general and commander in chief.

The house having returned to the assembly chamber, adjourned till half past 9 o'clock to-morrow.

Thursday, November 1.

The house met pursuant to adjournment.

Several petitions of a private nature were presented, and ordered to lie on the table.

The committee on the applications to be appointed Printers to the house, reported that upon examining the respective proposals they found them the same in respect to price except Mr. Oswald's, which were a little lower, but not so much as to authorise them to draw any distinction on that ground—that from particular circumstances it was difficult to determine what specific sum should be a payment, and therefore recommended that it should be left to the committee of accounts to make such compensation to the Printers at the time of presenting their bills, as should be deemed adequate to their services.

Mr. Robinson, agreeably to leave given, presented a bill for regulating the water courses, pumps, &c. in the district of Southwark, which was ordered to lie on the table.

On motion, the report of the committee on the application of the Printers, was taken up for a second reading, when Mr. M'Lean objected that in his opinion the committee had changed the object of their appointment, which was to report upon the respective proposals of the Printers, so that the house might have an opportunity of preferring the most favorable terms, and not to devise and recommend the mode of compensation for their services. He therefore thought the report a mere nullity, upon which it was unnecessary for the house to act.—In answer to this objection, Messrs. Lollar, Peters, and Fitzsimons insisted that it was not in the power of the committee to have made any other report. They had examined the proposals, they found them equally entitled to the attention of the house (except in an instance too trifling for observation) and as they had no personal objects to gratify, they had not pointed out any individual as entitled to a preference which would be interfering indeed with the principles of election by ballot. Respecting the mode proposed for paying the Printers who should be chosen, besides other inducements, the committee had been influenced by the present state of the paper currency, according to which the different proposals had been estimated. If it appreciates (which there is every reason to expect) they will receive too much, if it depreciates they will receive too little; in justice therefore to the public, as well as the individual, it was thought proper to leave the compensation to the time of actual payment.—No order being taken upon this report, the house proceeded to the election of the Printers, who were chosen as follows, viz.

For printing the journals in English, Messrs. Hall and Sellers.

For printing the journals and bills in German, Mr. Michael Bilmeyer.

For printing the bills and laws in English, Mr. Thomas Bradford.

Mr. M'Lean observing, that there was no business before the house, begged leave to introduce a motion, which from the disposition expressed both in and out of doors, he hoped would be universally acceptable. He then moved that the committee of accounts should be directed forthwith to count, burn, and destroy as much of the late emission of paper money as should be found in the treasury of the state. Mr. Peters approved of the measure, but wished the motion to be enlarged, so as to direct the committee to burn and destroy not only what money was found at this time in the treasury, but likewise what might be received during the present sessions. This amendment was admitted by Mr. M'Lean, but Mr. Fitzsimons argued, that the motion was not at all necessary, for the committee already possessed the power, and would undoubtedly exercise it in the manner most advantageous to the credit of the money, and the public interest. On this Mr. Lollar observed, that though it might not be absolutely requisite, yet as the motion itself would have a beneficial effect upon the paper in circulation, he hoped it would be adopted. He added, that unless this measure was pursued, and the attention of the committee immediately directed to this object, the treasurer would be critically situated, inasmuch as there are laws which direct him to pay certain public creditors, as soon as he receives the money, and however well inclined he may be to obey the resolutions of this house, the impropriety of imposing that obedience in contradiction to an existing law, must be evident.

The Speaker observed, that there was a committee upon that part of the message from council, which recommended the paper money to the consideration of the house, and this motion being referred to that committee, a report might possibly be made corresponding with the wishes of all parties as they agreed in the end tho' not in the means.—After a short conversation, in which the members declared their sole and unanimous object to be the revival of the credit of the late emission, the motion was accordingly referred to the committee on the message from council.

The Speaker mentioned, that there were several petitions before the house, and many more were expected, praying for compensation and relief according to the cases of the respective petitioners, and therefore he left it for the consideration of the house, whether they would follow the example of the preceding assembly, in appointing a standing committee to investigate and report upon those claims.—Whereupon a grand committee of claims was appointed, and several petitions referred to them.

The members of the Presbyterian Congregation of Orocataro, agreeably to leave given, presented a bill for incorporating that church, which being read, was ordered to lie on the table.

The bill for settling the pay and allowance of the members of the state convention, (which are the same as members of the assembly receive) was read a second time, and ordered to be published for public consideration.

Mary Bioren's petition was taken up for a second reading, and referred to a committee.

The house adjourned till to-morrow morning at half past 9 o'clock.

Friday, November 2.

The house met pursuant to adjournment.

A petition from a number of the inhabitants of York, complaining of the present mode of compelling the payment of debts, and praying the revival of an act by which creditors were obliged to take the effects of their debtors at a valuation, and several other petitions of a private nature were presented, read a second time, and referred to committees.

Agreeably to leave given, F. Vanphull presented a bill authorising him to erect a ferry over the river Schuylkill, which was read and ordered to lie on the table.

The bill for incorporating the Presbyterian Congregation of Middle Orocataro, and the bill for regulating, &c. the district of Southwark, were read a second time, and ordered to be printed for public consideration.

On motion of Mr. Peters, the election of Delegates to Congress, was appointed for Friday next.

The Speaker informed the house, that there was no business on their files which had not been acted upon: and Mr. Lollar therefore moved for an adjournment, to give the committees an opportunity of transacting the business referred to them.

The house adjourned to meet to-morrow morning at half past 9 o'clock.

The following were transmitted with the Message from Council.

Two letters from Charles Thomson, esquire, secretary to Congress; the former enclosing the report of the convention lately assembled in Philadelphia, together with the resolution and letter accompanying the same. And a letter enclosing the requisition of Congress, for the year 1787, passed the 11th instant, from which its appears, that there is wanting, for the services of the year 1787, the payment of one year's interest on the foreign debt, and such part of the principal as becomes due in the year 1788, and the payment of one year's interest on the domestic debt, the sum of 3,009 798 64-90 dollars.

That of the aforesaid sum 1,309,391 64 90 is absolutely necessary in specie.

Two acts of Congress, the one touching the grant of favors to foreign nations, stating the complaint of the ministry of the United Netherlands, against Virginia, for exempting French and American vessels from certain duties, to which the like commodities, imported in Dutch vessels, are less liable, as being contrary to the second article in their treaty with the United States, stipulating, that they shall be treated as the most favored nation.

And the other for keeping up a body of seven hundred troops, on the western frontiers.

Two letters from the delegates of this state, respecting the negociating a purchase of a small tract of country, situate between some part of the northern boundary of this state, and lake Erie—and informing council of the apprehending of Joseph Hamilton, who was principally concerned, in exciting the late tumults in the county of Luzerne.

The association of the Connecticut people, assembled at Tioga, by which they jointly and severally pledge their honors, and property, real and personal, to use their utmost exertions, for the protection and defence of each other, in the possession of their lands, against all invaders, they having purchased them of the aboriginal proprietors, and hold them under the right of a royal charter—This is subscribed by sixty seven persons.

A letter from Caleb Benton to John Franklin, dated Aug. 9, 1787, promising to exert himself in getting settlers this fall, to go to the lands about Tioga, but he would fill the country in the spring. It goes on to say, your policy will undoubtedly induce you not to suffer provisions to be carried from your settlement; but above all I most earnestly advise you to crush your enemies, and pursue them to the pit, and depend, I will assist you so far as in my power, and shall expect when I hear from you again, there will not be an Achan found in your camp, and trust you will not suffer the unhallowed feet of a Pennamite to tread on the land which the Lord hath given you.

There is a N. B. also added in these words—Please to present my compliments to major Jenkins, and inform him, I am determined his God shall be my God.

A letter from Joseph Hamilton, to colonel John Franklin, dated the 8th September, 1787. This letter promises also to fill the land with settlers; Hamilton upbraids Franklin for writing to him, as if it was apprehended he was discouraged—I don't know, says he, that we have given you any just reason for such an opinion: I am not in the least discouraged, in case you DO as you write—nay. I can say more. I am willing to risque any thing I possess upon it—I don't conceive I have give you any just reason, to make the conclusions you do make, however I heartily excuse you, it is time to be jealous; your jealousy begins with your friends, it will be well if it continues and ends with your enemies.

A letter from the same to the same, dated 11th September, 1787, complaining of Franklin's remissness, in suffering the Connecticut claimants to to secure their titles under the Pennsylvania commissioners, and thereby injure their cause, yet says he, you scold at your friends, nay, your best friends who would risque every thing for your welfare and safety, nay you reprobate them for the most distant PROPOSAL; in short such policy appears to me a very visible matter. I have known many a patient in a highly inflammable fever, being attended by a timid phyſician, who dares not let blood, ſuffer the diſſolution of his whole body, barely for want of drawing a little blood from the arm.

He complains highly of ſuffering the Pennſylvania laws to regulate that country. Shall we, after loſing many hundreds of lives, ſuffer theſe dirty raſcals to poſſeſs it, without the flaſh of a ſingle rifle, or any of the leaſt reſiſtance; to be manœuvred, tricked and jockied out of the whole, is too much. But if you ſhould, in proper time, afford any manly reſiſtance, my deſire is that you ſhould reſerve an handſome ſeat on the Tioga point, for we think it policy, in ſuch caſe, that either doctor Benton, or myſelf, ſhould remove to that place in the ſpring. But we can do nothing without your exertions, and that reſolute ones too. No righteous wheel will move until y[ou] move, and that in ſuch manner as to make t[h]e world know that you are in earneſt—they all think you are jeſting. Another obſervation—true policy knows no paſſion, you all will therefore calmly conſider the whole matter, as to the preciſe time to begin. But ſure I am, if it is not done this fall, you cannot have much ſuccour from this quarter.

A letter from the ſame, to the ſame, of the ſame date, city of Hudſon.—In which he tells him, that the principal characters do not believe that they have power "to kick up a bobbery there, and complains of bearing too much expence. The truth is (he obſerves) ſuch men will not venture any further part of their property and character, ſo that you will readily ſee your ſchemes are at an end.

Moreover, ſir, if I ſhould tell them, that there was ſomething about to be done, which by the way will be dangerous, our enemies would take the hint too ſoon; nay, if I could, in order to prove it, ſhew ſome clauſes in your letter, which I have often done, to keep up their ſpirits, they would immediately ſay, this has been an old ſtory for a long time; we do not believe it, colonel Franklin is miſtaken in his policy; from what we hear almoſt every day, it is probable to us, that he will be in priſon ſoon, if he is not already. However if you ſuddenly and in proper time, ſever the wheat from the chaff, and ſuffer not a diſſenting whiſper amongſt you, I can aſſure you, that this part of the world will be alive, in removing themſelves, as ſoon as they know of ſuch matter. Gore ſays, in letter to me, that, as ſoon as the Pennſylvania commiſſioners meddle with the titles of lands, he would find Indians enough to protect them.—Where are Gore's Indians? are they ſcattered away by his new ſettlers at New-Town?

On motion, and by ſpecial order, the meſſage was read a ſecond time, and referred to Meſſrs. Fitzſimons, M'Lene and Rittenhouſe, to arrange and report.

Extract of a letter from a gentleman in Waſhington town (Pennſylvania) to his friend now in this city, dated Oct. 25, 1787.

"There have been two families (except one of each) killed a few days ago in this county. They lived on the head waters of Wheeling, about 13 or 14 miles from this place. Unleſs ſome ſteps are taken to put us in a ſtate of defence, we ſhall probably be ſoon a frontier."

"One of the unhappy families was of the name of M'Intoſh, the other that of Davis. Your friend Ryerſon ſlept in the houſe of one of the deceaſed the very night before the murder happened."

The PRETTY COTTAGER,

A NEW SONG.

AS on a pleaſant hill I ſtood,
A cottage in the vale I view'd,
Whereat I'd never been:
I thither went, as loſt from town,
'Twas growing late, the ſun was down,
I call'd to let me in.

A young and pretty Cottager
Came tripping, ſinging to the door,
And look'd a ſoul's delight;
While bluſhes heighten'd every grace,
I ſilence broke, I told my caſe,
And begg'd to ſtay all night.

With trembling accent came reply,
'Your ſuit I'm ſorry to deny,
But I am quite alone.'
I urg'd diſtreſs and innocence,
While ſhe reply'd, 'On no pretence!
You muſt not; pray begone.'

'Twas overcaſt! a low'ring ſky!
It rain'd! the whiſtling winds blew high!
And I to wander went;
When kind compaſſion ſeiz'd her ſoul,
She could not bear me thus to ſtroll,
She call'd, and gave conſent.

But me enjoin'd to give a proof
Of honour, while beneath her roof,
(For virtue ſhe could boaſt)
I vow'd to act a noble part,
Her would have thank'd with all my heart,
But found my heart was loſt.

Her modeſt air, her pretty face,
Her—Gods! her ev'ry charming grace,
I to the world prefer;
And if ſhe learns to love like me,
My glory day and night ſhall be
The Pretty Cottager.

A MAN went to ſee his neighbour who was ill, and ſitting down by his bed ſide, aſked him ſeveral queſtions concerning the ſtate of his health; which the other, who was ſuddenly taken ſpeechleſs, could not anſwer. This highly offended his viſitor, who was not conſcious of the cauſe; and riſing in a rage, told him, That pleaſe God he would be ſick himſelf ſoon, and when he came to ſee him the devil a word he would ſay to him, that nothing may be loſt.

Three Pounds Reward.

STRAYED or ſtolen from the paſture of the ſubſcriber, in the diſtrict of Southwark, on Monday the 22d inſtant, a Pair of dark-Brown HORSES with ſtars in their foreheads, about fifteen hands high, ſix years old, natural trotters; one of them has a little white on the near hind foot. Whoever has taken up the ſame, upon delivering them to the owner, ſhall receive the above Reward and all reaſonable charges.

Oct. 29. 12ſp. THOMAS PENROSE.

Philadelphia, October 16, 1787.

For Griſt Mills & other Water Works

On an extenſive Plan,

One of the beſt ſituations in America is offered

FOR SALE,

Together With

Batſto Iron-Works,

At the forks of Little Egg-Harbour river, one of the moſt healthy ſpots in New Jerſey, 38 miles by land from Philadelphia, and within a few hours ſail of New York.

THE river, communicating with the ſea by the beſt inlet on the Jerſey coaſt, is navigable for veſſels of 200 tons within a few miles of the works; thoſe of 100 tons may approach within one mile; flats and ſcows, carrying 10 or 12 tons, load and unload at the works. The uſual freight to New York or Philadelphia is 10 ſhillings per ton. The furnace ſtream affords plenty of water, in the dryeſt ſeaſon, for 3 or 4 pair of mill ſtones, beſides ſupplying the iron works.——An excellent dam, which has been increaſing in ſtrength many years by the cinder from the furnace, is well ſecured from the danger of freſhes, and the works are ſcarcely ever injured or delayed by either ice or backwater, though the tide ſwells to the foot of the dam: mills may therefore be erected at a moderate expence. This being a part of the country in which many people and many teams are neceſſarily employed in collecting and preparing for market the iron and lumber with which it abounds, and at the ſame time illy adapted to the raiſing of grain for their ſupport, there is, and muſt continue to be, a demand for large quantities of midlings, cornell, ſhorts and bran, at advanced prices; and the convenience of conveying flour at a light expence, either to New York or Philadelphia, or to more diſtant markets, will not be overlooked nor conſidered as of ſmall importance, eſpecially as there are few mill ſeats of any conſiderable capacity equally adapted to the New York market, which is not unfrequently ſupplied with ſuperfine flour from Philadelphia. A choice of the various kinds of wheat may be drawn to this ſeat from Virginia, Maryland, Delaware, New Jerſey, and New York with greater eaſe and convenience than to almoſt any other mills now in being.

The FURNACE, which by the extenſive lands annexed to it, is abundantly ſupplied with wood and ore, is now in blaſt, and is noted for producing the beſt hollow ware in America, the metal being peculiarly well adapted to the making of caſtings of all kinds, as well as excellent bar iron.

A FORGE, with four fires and two hammers, belongs to the eſtate, and ſtands about half a mile from the furnace, on another fine ſtream which affords plenty of water.

A SLITTING and ROLLING MILL, having been diſuſed for the laſt two or three years, may want ſome repairs to prepare it for uſe; but the forebays and gates are in perfect order, and being in the proper ſpot for griſt mills, may be appropriated to that uſe.

Two SAW MILLS in good order, and a ſmall Griſt Mill.

The MANSION HOUSE is elegantly ſituated about 100 yards from the furnace, on an height which commands a view of the whole works, and of the two villages formed by the ſurrounding buildings belonging to the eſtate, ſuch as barns, ſtables, coal houſes, workſhops, ſtorehouſes and dwellings for workmen. Adjoining the manſion houſe is a large and fruitful garden, affording plenty of vegetables, and well ſtored with choſen fruit trees; alſo a young bearing orchard, containing near 2000 apple trees, moſtly grafted.

Theſe excellent accommodations for extenſive and profitable manufactories, are offered to ſale at a very low rate, and on terms of payment calculated for the eaſe of the purchaſer, who may pay the greater part in the produce of the Iron Works, at a price to be agreed upon; and they are capable of producing more in one year, than will pay the whole price demanded.

For particulars, apply to WILLIAM RICHARDS, at the ſaid Works, JOHN COX, at Bloomſbury, near Trenton, or CHARLES PETTIT, in Philadelphia.

Foreign Intelligence.

LONDON, August 29.

A SINGULAR case of murder—Jane Norkott, the wife of Arthur Norkott, of Hertford, in the year 1629 was found dead in her bed, a knife sticking in the floor, and her throat cut. The coroner's verdict was felo de se. But thirty days after her death, suspicions arising that she had been murdered, the body was taken from its grave in the presence of the jury, and a great number of people; and an appeal was brought by the son of the deceased against his father, grandmother, aunt and one Oakman to whom the aunt was married.

Mr. Serjeant Maynard, among whose papers this account was found, attended the trial, and has reported the follow evidence:

The minister of the parish where the fact was committed, being sworn, deposed "that the dead body being taken out of the grave thirty days after the party's death, and lying on the grass, and the four defendants being present, were required each of them to touch the dead body. Oakman's wife fell upon her knees, and prayed God to shew tokens of her innocency. The appellant then touched the body, whereupon the brow of the dead, which before was of a livid and carrion colour began to have a dew or gentle sweat arise on it, which increased by degrees till the sweat ran down in drops on the face; the brow turned to a likely and fresh colour, and the deceased opened one of her eyes and shut it again; and this opening the eye was done several times; she likewise thrust out the ring or marriage finger three times, and pulled it in again, and the finger droupped blood from it on the grass.—The truth of this story being doubted, Sir Nicholas Hyde, who the appeal, questioned the witness very strictly, but no imputation whatever appeared against his veracity. His brother also was examined; who testified the same facts.

It appeared from other evidence, "that the deceased lay in a composed manner in her bed, the bed cloaths not at all disturbed, and her child by her in bed—that her throat was cut from ear to ear, and her neck broke, that there was no blood in the bed, saving a tincture on the bolster—that from the bed's head there was a stream of blood on the floor, which ran along until it pended in the bendings of the floor, in a large quantity: and there was also another stream of blood at the bed's foot, but no continuance or communication of the blood of either of those two places from one to the other, or from the bed—that under the matt of the bed there were clots of congealed blood—that the bloody knife was found sticking in the floor at a distance from the bed, the handle of which inclined from the bed, and the point towards it—that there was the print of a thumb and four fingers of a left hand."

Sir Nicholas Hyde enquired how it was discerned to be a left hand. Upon which the witness said, "If it please that hon. judge, viz. (Sir Edward Powell, who was then on the bench) to put his left hand upon your left hand, you cannot possibly place your right hand in the same posture;" which on being tried, appeared to be true. It was also given in evidence, that the grandmother and Oakman's wife had confessed that they lay in the next room to the dead body that night, and that none came into the house till she was found dead. The prisoners made no defence, and the jury found all the defendants, except Oakman, guilty. The judgment against the aunt was respited on account she was enfient. But the father of the plaintiff, and husband of the deceased, together with the grandmother, were executed.

August 10. Remarkable alteration in the colour of a Negro woman, communicated to the Royal Society:——A cook-maid, a native of Virginia, about 40 years of age, remarkably healthy, of a strong and robust constitution, had her skin originally as dark as that of the most swarthy African's; but about 15 years ago, she observed that membrane, in the parts next adjoining to the finger nails, to become white. Her mouth soon underwent the same change, and the phœnomenon hath since continued gradually to extend itself over the whole body; so that every part of its surface is become more or less the subject of this surprising alteration. In her present state, four parts in five of the skin are white, smooth, and transparent, as a in white European, elegantly shewing the ramifications of the subjacent blood vessels: the parts remaining footy, daily lose their blackness, and in some measure partake of the prevailing colour; so that a very few years will, in all probability, induce a total change. The neck and back, along the course of the vertebræ, maintain their pristine hue the most, and in some spots proclaim their original state; the head, face, and breast, with belly, legs, arms, and thighs, are almost wholly white; the axillæ party-coloured; the skin of these parts, as far as white, being covered with white hair; where dark, with black. Her face and breast as often as the passions anger, shame, &c. have been immediately observed to glow with blushes, as also when, in pursuance of her business, she has been exposed to the action of the fire, some freckles have made their appearance.

A very singular circumstance attended the death of lieutenant Thompson, who died a few days ago. He had long paid his addresses to a young lady, whose parents had been averse to the match. The morning he died, they were walking out together—after some conversation, they sat down on the grass. He complained of being very tired, and begged he might repose his head on her lap—she allowed him to do so—on which, laying down his head, he fell into a deep slumber, and died without a groan.

A fine vein of that valuable mineral called cobalt, has lately been discovered in the neighbourhood of Keswick. It bears a perfect resemblance to that distinguished by the Germans by the name of kupffer nicol, being very heavy and hard, and of a granulated structure? Some pieces of it have undergone a chemical analysis, and yield a large portion of bismuth; it is more striated than that usually found on Mendip hills, in Cornwal, and consequently approaches nearer to the quality of the German ore, which is the best.

The Comical Revenge.——One Perrot, a noted fighting-man, having received an insult from a barber, like the Jews of old, has vowed revenge upon the whole fraternity, which he executes in the following humourous manner: Going into a barber's shop he sits down, and, as is customary, without verbal request, on Sunday morning and the preceding evening is shaved in his turn; after this, going out without paying, he is generally stopped by the Tonsor, who claims a penny for his labour in taking off his beard, which the other refuses, appealing to the company whether he requested any such operation? telling the barber withal, that he may put it on again if he pleases; and to the question on the supposition, that if he did not ask to be shaved, for what reason he sat down in the shop? he generally answers to rest himself. If this is not admitted as valid, he then proposes fifty cuffs as the dernier resort. in which he generally gives what is called satisfaction to the injured party.

AMERICA.

CARLISLE, October 24.

Above two weeks ago, the following melancholy accident happened in Franklin county——some time in the night the house of Mr. Bowen, junr. took fire and consumed to ashes, the wind blowing very high, the fire communicated to the house of his father, at the distance of about 20 rods, which likewise was consumed. We are informed that a considerable part of the old man's effects were saved, but the former's wife with four of his children and the whole of his houshold goods were burnt. It is hoped, that, as the winter is fast approaching this may be a warning to people to guard against that impetuous and dreadful element——fire.

CHARLESTON, Oct. 23.

By Halifax (Nova Scotia) papers, to the 28th of August, we find proclamations of his excellency lieut. gov. Parr, to admit for the support of the loyalists, into that province, "from any part of the United States of America, until his majesty's pleasure shall be known to the contrary, every species of live stock and live provisions, potatoes, bread, flour, hogs, poultry, sheep, asses, rice and biscuit;" and what is particularly observable, when we reflect on those virtuous people's boasting of their lumber country, is permission, in their proclamations, for importation into their happy and highly favored land, of every sort of squared timber, scantling, plank, boards, shingles, staves, heading and hoops, but only by British subjects and none other; and in none other than British built ships, owned by his majesty's subjects. Daily, remarks a correspondent, have we pointed out to us, even by Britons, (unintentionally) the necessity of a uniform and general system of government, which appears to be amply provided for in the new federal plan offered us by that distinguished and long honored band of worthies, the convention lately convened in Philadelphia. Though foreign enemies do and will, and a few narrow, purblind politicians among us may, and do carp at the new government now before the people, yet we are happy in notifying to our readers, that both letters and news-papers, from every part of the states evince and proclaim the cordial disposition of their REAL sons to receive and ratify the same—for taking the proposed government collectively, It is the most unexceptionable under the Sun.

Extract of a letter from New-York, Oct. 8.

"You doubtless have seen and read the new constitution given us by the convention of some of our most able and patriotic citizens; men who only, in this constitution, can possibly have but the honor and glory of their country at heart. I admit that individuals, and perhaps some of the states, may conceive they are relinquishing too much, but if they will dispassionately reason on its principles, I am persuaded, that taking it for all and all, it is not in human wisdom to produce a better. Demagogues and minions in office, you must expect in every state, who will endeavour to prevent its operation, for causes which must strike you; but the virtuous of this land, I hope, will think and act for themselves, uninfluenced by every other consideration than that of love for their country. I have just returned from the New England states, where the new government seems universally to be approved of. No question with me, my friend, but that it will speedily be adopted; they, and what from your thorough acquaintance with Rhode-Island you may be surprised at, will also greedily ratify it.—These sons of injustice, even deem it calculated to give us peace and happiness at home, and respectability and honor abroad; and its rejection they are sensible likewise, will throw us into anarchy, confusion, and all its concomitant evils.

"The English and Scotch birds of passage, dispersed all over America, you may rest assured will secretly make efforts to prevent the adoption of our new government, for it is pregnant, they whisper, with injury to their plans and pursuits, and of course then, it is the reverse with us. New-York, (a few in office, and their sycophants excepted) will, I am almost certain, generally approve of it. Here we have no question, but the enlightened southern states will also.

"I presume you have heard, that it has been agreed by the Ohio Company of the eastern states, that immediately 150 men should be employed to go on the land this fall, at the company's expence, for the purpose of building huts for the reception of settlers, (who are chiefly old war-worn soldiers) having the city laid out in lots, &c. It is also covenanted, that the subscriptions should be paid in by the 4th of November. There is soon to be another meeting of the associators at Boston, to fix on the ultimate plan of operations.

"Our New Brunswick, Shelburne, and Halifax friends, crowd in upon us fast with their vessels, to convey to their respective Edens, our produce and lumber, anticipating that the plans given by the convention, will shut them out of our ports in future; and rest assured, until we do exclude all English vessels from our bays, ports, and havens, and prevent our produce being exported in none other than American built vessels, navigated by Americans only, we shall not flourish either in commerce, agriculture or manufactures."

Philadelphia, Nov. 7.

Extract of a letter from Augusta in Georgia, Oct. 15.

"It is now two weeks this day since my arrival here, at which time only 30 members of the Assembly attended. There being a great necessity for forming a house, ten days further were allowed for collecting, and those who had been here some time, were permitted to return home during that period. This is the day on which they were to return; but as they come in very slow, we begin to fear we shall not be able to form a house—if we do not by the 18th, we shall give up all hope, and return to Savannah. Our lower country members are tardy, and our upper ones are generally engaged in defending their families and property on the frontiers. Should we fail in making a house, I know not what will be the consequence.—It now appears absolutely necessary that an army of at least 2000 men be raised against the savages, who are numerous on our frontier counties, and in force round and near the forts and stations in which the inhabitants have taken shelter; they have killed in all 51 white and black. The ground on which Gen. Clark fought first, has been since examined, and 28 dead Indians found; his loss was 6 killed and 12 wounded. We have now on our frontiers a sufficient force to act on the defensive, and cover the settlements from the depredations of the savages. In case the legislature does not meet, the executive will declare the state in alarm, when martial law will in some measure take place. Much confusion and destruction of property may be then expected."

A letter from a gentleman in a neighbouring state to a gentleman in New-Haven, says, "The constitution of government proposed by the Convention I do not think will operate as a magical charm. I have no idea that it will at its first establishment drive every evil out of the country, or conjure into it every kind of national benefit; but I believe, that by a wise administration under it, it will do all that a wise and good government can do. It will by degrees and in due time answer all the purposes expressed in the preamble, viz.—Form a more perfect union, establish justice, insure domestic tranquility, provide for the common defence, promote the general welfare, and secure the blessings of liberty to ourselves and our posterity.——This is all we want by it, and all we have reason to expect from it, and so much as this it promises. To be so far influenced therefore by jealousies, by sinister motives, by partial advantages, by popular and ambitious views, by the intrigues of designing men, or by dogmatical opinions, as to refuse the giving of it a fair trial, 'would not argue, in my opinion, the highest degree of prudence,' or wisdom."

In the Antelope Packet, lately arrived at New-York from Falmouth, came passenger the honorable Capt. Cochran, of the British navy.

Thursday the 15th inst. is appointed as a day of thanksgiving throughout the state of Connecticut.

Mr. Oliver Evans, of Red-clay Creek, near Wilmington, in Newcastle county, hath constructed a Merchant Mill, now in use, so as to receive the wheat at the tail of the waggon, and hoist and clean it as often over as necessary, and convey it into the stones, and grind, hoist, spread and cool the meal compleatly; and attend the boulting hopper regularly, done by machinery (of his own invention) without the least manual labour, and but very little attendance. The boulting is more compleatly done than is possible in the common way—the machinery so simple, cheap and durable, that the meal they save from waste will more than build and keep them in repair for ever. They are found by experience to suit all sorts of weather. Said mill formerly required three hands to attend her, but now one attends her night and day steady running, with very little assistance. He fixes his bed within reach of the meal spout (convenient to regulate the grinding) blows out his light, and seldom rises or lights it again until morning (except to regulate the boulting in case of changeable weather.) In the morning his flour is ready for packing, which, with dressing the stones, constitutes almost the whole of his work.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY.

Saturday, October 27. A. M.

The petition of Richard Wells, was read a second time, and it was moved and seconded to commit.

Mr. Findley was against committing; he had been on a committee of the last house on this business, and they had agreed it did not come before the house. Being one of the committee, he was enabled to understand this business better than most other gentlemen, who had not the same opportunity. But it might be observed, from the face of the petition, & from the relation, that it was a business which could not come before the house. The petitioners inform you, that council have decided on a similar application of theirs, and that they refused their prayer by a majority of one vote. What, then, has the house to do with it? are we to examine whether council did right or wrong, by their decision, or whether one is a sufficient majority, to determine the vote of that body?

It is clear, if we take up business, after it has been decided upon in the executive department, that we shal invite a great deal. But what right has the house to go into any enquiry in such cases? none. They are as supreme in the executive department, as we are in the legislative, and there lies no appeal from them to us. For which reason, it will be proper that the petitioners have leave to withdraw their petition.

Mr. Peters was not satisfied by the arguments of the gentleman from Westmoreland, that there was an impropriety in committing; he had a great respect for council, but he did know from any thing that appeared on the face of the petition, that the gentleman's observation of its being without the province of the house to notice it, was well founded, nor was it derogatory to the respect due council, to hear the petitioners—Council might perhaps, have ordered the petition, when before them, to be dismissed, because they might doubt if their authority extended to giving away the public monies, or property of the state; if so, and they declined complying with the request of the petitioners, it can be no reason, why the legislature should not attend to it; if it be found a case so extremely hard, on account of the rigor of our laws, no doubt can be entertained of the power of the house to remedy the evil. In all nations this power is reserved. In England it is delegated to a board of commissioners, who have full authority to mitigate the rigor of the maritime law: if such is given to council, still that body might suppose, after the confiscation of the property, or collection of the revenue, it was beyond their reach, and that they could not return the one or the other. But however this might be, there could not be any impropriety in admitting the petition to go to a committee; it was ungenerous to attempt to stop it in the first stage—nor did he think it proper to refuse; he would be the last person in the house to interfere improperly, with either the judicial or executive branches of the government, but this he looked upon to be totally distinct from either. If the gentlemen's case was found to be a hard one, and that the law operated as a grievance, it was in the power of the assembly only to furnish the remedy; and this could not be devised, without first determining on the disease. The house would therefore certainly think it proper to commit, for the purpose of enquiry.

Mr. Findley agreed with the gentleman from the county in his general sentiments, and apprehended if the house made a law, which was injurious to the people, that they ought to repeal it, though many inconveniences might arise by such repeal. But there was a material difference between the power of the house to repeal its own laws and rescinding what had been done, in the execution of the law. Certainly too the power of remitting fines, did not lay with the house. Though the power of disposing of the public money of the state does, yet the house would hardly be induced to part with this, wantonly, to men who never did service for it.

Council, the gentleman says, would not go into the business, because they had no right to give away the public money; that I apprehend was not the reason. I suppose they were conscious of an impropriety in remitting the fine, for they must have been certain on the question of right, they knew they had this right by the constitution; and it appears by this vote, that they exercised the right by judging of the propriety of remitting the penalty. If the house was to attend to all the complaints, arising from dissatisfaction with the decision of council, on every refusal to remit fines, they would have business enough; or if the laws are to be altered on every complaint of their severity, then it would have to be frequently done indeed, for no person suffering under them but what complain.

The question is not so much the power of remitting, as the propriety of admitting such business before us at all; shall our time be taken up with attending to things evidently improper from the very face of them? Shall we hold out encouragement, for people to expect from us, an alteration of the decisions of council: Shall we set up for the court of appeals from the executive and judicial branches? no: these are principles which I am ever against.—The power of the council to remit, is another question; but I believe it is certainly understood they have the power, though they did not see it right to exercise it in behalf of these persons. I repeat it again, the repeal of the law lies with us, but we have it not in our power to rescind the execution. If it is a hardship, or been executed too rigorously, it does not lay with us to apply the remedy.

Mr. Robinson. The gentleman tells us that it appears improper to commit the petition, from its face, and from his knowledge of the business; this conclusion he draws from the opportunity he tells you that he has had, to study the subject when on the committee, to whom it was referred, by the late house. Perhaps we all might be of his opinion, if we had the same advantage of attending to it particularly. I don't recollect either that he discovered any thing of its impropriety, when the petition came before the late house. I believe he did not then contend he had discovered any thing on the face of it which rendered the commitment improper; on the contrary, he was willing to have it committed, as he went on the committee to whom it was referred.

With respect to the question, whether council have a right to remit fines and penalties after collection or not—I think it a matter of indifference, so far as connected with the present subject; nor do I wish to go at this time into the merits of the case, but sure it can't be a disputable point here, that the house have a power to dispose of the monies of the state. It is certainly in the power of the house to grant any person, who has been injured by the operation of a law, a sum which justice to his case may require. It cannot be a disputed point, either that the power of the house is adequate to remedy the petitioners; if it should be found on enquiry that it will be proper so to do, the only question therefore is, whether the present occasion is a proper one, for this interference of the legislature? And this can be better determined by deliberation and investigation, than in a hurry and on the moment it is applied for.

Mr. Peters could not see upon what principle the repeal of a too rigorous law could originate, unless the rigorous execution was first established, so as to rouse the attention of the legislature, if this case may produce that effect, where is the harm in proceeding to the investigation—The committee are not confined to report particularly on this occasion, if on enquiry and discussion, they find our navigation laws too oppressive, they will bring it before the house. I am as much against partial interference as the gentleman from Westmoreland, and would, rather, that a person should abide by the inconvenience, than establish a precedent, which might in future embarrass the decisions of the executive, or judicial departments; but committing this petition, can have no such effect, nor without it, can the house discover the propriety of altering a law, whose execution occasions complaint, and it is in the power of the house only to remedy the defect. The opposition to commitment does not seem fair or able, and this is a subject of more importance than a thousand others that are referred to committees.

Mr. Wynkoop spoke also on this occasion, but was not heard.

Mr. Findley would explain that part of his conduct, which the member from the county had remarked upon, this was, his not objecting to a commitment on a former occasion. He owned he might have mistaken the reasons for which gentlemen were desirous of having the petition now commited, he understood it was with a design to relieve the petitioners, by remitting or returning the penalty. But by the reasoning of the gentleman on the other side of the chair (Mr. Peters) it appears, that it is with an intent to lay the foundation for repealing the impost laws, and I agree with him, before that can be done, it must appear to the house wrong, or oppressive in its operation.

Now if this is the object, and it is necessary to take a review of all revenue laws, and repeal those that are complained of, the commitment may not be improper.

But if we are to repeal, or alter the execution of a law, it is a business not belonging to the legislature—if our laws operate as a hardship on the community, it may be some foundation for repeal, but this would go too far, for every hardship would produce an application.—Because some men have been hanged, or whipped, under our penal laws, is that a reason for their repeal? or is a man who suffered under any of our laws to be relieved by an ex post facto one? If this precedent is once established, no doubt but the house would have business enough.

A gentleman (Mr. Robinson) has mentioned the power of the house to dispose of all public monies—that such power lies with the house is true, but I can never conceive, when a man has been punished for a breach of the law by fine, that it is in the province of the house to restore it; and if the gentleman means to do it by any indirect method, it is blameable, it would be better to go boldly into it, and say our laws have been improperly executed, and we will correct the abuse, by assuming the right of deciding on such execution—we will go into the enquiry also, of the conduct of our courts of justice, and blend in ourselves the exercise of the legislative, executive and judicial powers.

Mr. Fitzsimons thought that the petitions of the people ought to be attended to, it was their right to be heard, and clearly defined to be so in the constitution.

The regard which is due to our constituents, should certainly induce us at least to take the pains of enquiring into their complaint—The gentleman from Westmoreland insists on its dismission, because the application appears improper on the face of the petition, and adds that council only have authority to decide in this case. The gentleman will remember this law was passed in the late spring, and was confessedly a matter of experiment; he also knows that these persons are the first who have suffered under it, and they think their sufferings unmerited.—They applied to that body, whom the gentleman insists was adequate to grant them relief, which was not obtained—Application is now made to us, and we are solicited to enquire whether the laws operated unjustly against these people, and whether, if that injustice is made appear, it will not be proper to correct its severity.

Notwithstanding the gentleman contends this subject is foreign to our department, yet I am sure it is difficult to draw the line to determine what is in the power of the house and what is not. If when the report is brought before us, any thing should be offered on this head, it will be time enough to go into the discussion—but to me it looks a little extraordinary, and pointed too, that such opposition should take place on the commitment. But I hope the house will agree on the propriety of enquiring into the complaints of our constituents, and in the present case approve of the motion for commitment.

Mr. M'Lene hoped the house would not agree to commit—for he could not conceive how it becomes a subject of enquiry in this case, more than in any other, to decide on what the courts of justice and council have done: It is quite out of propriety for this house to pass an opinion, upon the decisions in either of those places, of the execution of the laws of Pennsylvania.

This business has been carefully enquired into before the court of common pleas, and learned council in plenty were engaged on both sides;—the business has been also before council, who undoubtedly have power to remit fines by the express words of the constitution, and will any gentleman rise and say that this house have such power? I believe they will not.

The gentleman on the left hand of the chair (Mr. Peters) thinks it is a rigorous law, but I remember well to hear the judge of the court of common pleas declare it was not. He premised that it was not a severe law, that is, considered as an impost law, and not so much so as in other nations, even the English, but the proceedings of a court of justice, which determine against any person, are deemed hard by the sufferer, whether his loss be occasioned by neglect or disobedience. Another gentleman (Mr. Robinson) on the other side of the house holds, tho' the house cannot remit fines, yet they can dispose of the public money, and tho' we don't remit, yet we can bestow; this, sir, amounts to the same thing, the act is in fact the same; and when we agree to receive petitions of this kind, and to alter the decisions of council, certainly no man who has suffered the loss of his property, and does not meet relief in our courts of justice, or by the interference of council, or who is to be punished, but will apply to us, if he finds here a pardoning shop. No one will regard what is done up stairs (alluding to the council chamber) if he can find a remitting shop below. Every one will certainly apply here, and that will be a great number no doubt. If we want business this will be a ready way to draw it to us—but surely the gentleman must see the impropriety of the application; for let the art of man give it what call they will, it is certain the house have no power to remit a fine—and let redress be furnished by us, it is still the same fish, dress it which way you please, and it is a business with which the legislature have nothing to do, wherefore the house will pursue the same line of conduct, as they did in the woman's case, just now decided on—and let the petitioners have leave to withdraw their petition.

Mr. Fitzsimons did not think it proper to go into the merits of the case on the present question—he did not wish it. But gentlemen would consider what had been the practice of the assembly on former occasions—many applications had been made, and many people, who have suffered under the laws, were relieved by the house; no opposition had ever been made to the commitment of their petitions.

A gentleman who suffered by a loss of public money, was relieved by the late house from that loss, and a thousand other precedents might be adduced—They should be very strong reasons, for the house to decide against listening to the memorials of the people: In the woman's case, which was just now dismissed, remedy could be had in the courts of justice—in the case of the petitioners, redress could not be procured but by the interference of the legislature. Wherefore it becomes our duty to hear them. When the report it made, should it appear that the house have not the power to grant their prayer, or that it is improper, no doubt but they will determine so.

The merits of the case will then come fairly before us, and we shall have time to study it—but it does not appear candid in the gentlemen to give this opposition, at a time when it would be inconsistent to go into the investigation.

Mr. M'Lene was not surprised at the charge of want of candour, when he heard the gentleman who made it draw a comparison between the individual, who by an unforeseen accident lost the public money, and the men who by an infraction of the law were fined for the offence; the cases were nothing alike—this is to make restoration of what has been lawfully taken: It will appear pretty too to give a large sum of money to men who have done nothing for it but violated the laws—indeed he thought a better comparison might be had.

The question on commitment was put and determined in the affirmative—31 members rising in favour of it; whereupon it was referred to Messrs. Peters, Evans and Lollar to report.

I DO not love a man that's tall,
A man that's little's worse than all;

A sober man I will not take,
A drunken man my heart would break;
All these I do sincerely hate,
And yet I love the marriage state.

ANECDOTE.

NOT long since a person visited the city of New-York, under the stile of Nobility. For several months his manner of living accorded with his assumed character. His lodgings, his attendants and his equipage corresponded only with rank and opulence. Fashion received from him its laws, and taste appealed to him as its genuine standard. Balls, assemblies and entertainments welcomed him as their principal ornament; while senators and ambassadors were pleased to be enrolled as his companions. In this career of glory, he addressed a young lady, highly respectable for her character and connections: but, at the very eve of marriage, by the fresh appearance of the ink, which he had used in forging certain deeds, designed as proofs of great family property, and by a dispute with a person about the price of the parchment on which one of them was written, he was discovered to be a miserable vagabond, whom infamy would have blushed to have acknowledged as her off-spring.

Foreign Intelligence.

HAGUE, August 22.

WE learn, that that part of the states of Utrecht that sit at Amersfort, have declared, that they are willing to accept the mediation of France, on condition that the deputies of those, who hold their sittings at Utrecht, be expelled from the assembly of the states general. The resolution they have taken on that head, is couched in the most virulent terms against the province of Holland. The states of Gueldres have also resolved to accept the mediation of France, provided that Prussia and England are equally admitted therein, and that Holland will revoke all the resolutions she has taken with regard to the troops. In the mean time Gueldres has thought fit to revoke, of her own accord, a resolution passed unanimously four years ago by all the confederates, viz. the suppression of the military jurisdiction, by virtue of which the troops were withdrawn from all authority of the civil magistrate, and solely subjected, even in civil cases, to the will and pleasure of the captain general. By this trait we may judge of what might be expected, if ever the republican system was at the mercy of those, who by pillage and desolation, have thrown unhappy Gueldres into a state of slavery.

As to the rest, advices from all parts agree in saying, that the march of the Prussian troops is suspended, and the magazines countermanded.—We shall speak of this with more certainty the next post.

August 23. Their high mightinesses having deliberated upon the letter of M. the lieut. general Vander Duffen, governor of Bois-le-Duc, have thought proper, for the present, to request and authorise the council of state to issue their orders to the governors and commanders, or other officers, commandant of all the towns and places situated upon the territories of the state, as well as to the respective officers of the district of the generality, that they do pay a very strict attention to the passage and the entrance of any strange military force, although they may be provided with passports; and not to permit them to have a passage, in case they arrive in troops or companies, successively, and in a greater number than usual, but to stop them, and after a very summary enquiry into the reasons of their coming, as well as of the place from whence they may have come, and the place to which they are going, forthwith to give the most speedy advice of these particulars to the council of state.

An extract of the above resolution is to be sent with a copy of the letter of lieut. general Vander Duffen, to M. M. Lastevenon de Berkenrode and Brandtsen, ambassadors ordinary and extraordinary from their high mightinesses to the court of France, with orders to make a friendly communication of it in the manners most suitable and convenient to the ministry of France, for the purpose of gaining information, if they have any knowledge whether such passports are to be considered as supposititious and false.

The agent Slicker is charged to give notice to the Marquis de Verac, ambassador from France, of the above resolution, by way of information to him, and to request him to instruct their high mightinesses in whatever he may know on the subject.

They are also to send to his serene highness, as captain general, an extract of the resolution of their high mightinesses, by way of information to him.

VIENNA, August 8.

We wait here with impatience for the arrival of the deputies of the Belgic provinces, who are said to be in number 36. As many amongst them have made themselves remarkable by their opposition to the new system, little is expected from the negociation which is going to take place.

The count de Belgioso has had several conferences with the emperor, who is extremely dissatisfied with his conduct; it is publicly mentioned here, that the harshness of the former, in the beginning of the troubles, has been the cause of all the discontent which has arisen in the Low Countries.

We are assured on the other hand, that the army of 45,000 men, which is already on its march, is not so much destined to go against the Austrian Netherlands, as to form an army of observation, in order to prevent any inconveniencies which may be occasioned by the neighbourhood of the armies which are expected in our environs.

PETERSBURGH, July 13.

During the course of the empress's journey to Cherson, many men presented themselves before her with long beards; upon which her majesty asked them if they were Jews. Having answered her majesty that they were not, she ordered them to go and shave themselves. The poor devils having understood the order that was given them, fell upon their knees, and beseeched her majesty not to insist upon the execution of it, protesting that they would rather part with their lives than with their beards. Their prayer was granted. It is well known, that before the Czar Peter the Great ordered his subjects to cut their beards, all the Russians wore them long.

WARSAW, August 15.

The interview of the king with the empress of Russia, particularly the many conversations which his majesty has had with the prince Potemkin, has given rise to several reports which we know not how to credit. Among the number of those which have been mentioned, is this—that to give a striking mark of his esteem and consideration to prince Potemkin, whom the empress honors with her fullest confidence, the estates which that nobleman has successively purchased in Poland, will be erected into a principality or independent lordship at the first diet that shall be held. These estates which border on the confines of Russia, are all contiguous; and though they are still capable of many improvements, the present annual revenues of them amount to two millions of Polish florins. The extent of them is considerable enough to form a separate principality; the population is numerous, the soil fertile, and the ground fit for agriculture and commerce, by the rivers and navigable canals, with which it is watered. It is supposed, that to accelerate this and other changes which had been projected on account of the journey to Cherson, a diet will be immediately convoked, but which probably cannot be held without the band of a confederation. Prince Potemkin is at present on a visit to his nephew, comte Branitzki, grand general of the crown, at his estates in Ukraine; and they say he is coming to pay a visit to the king at Warsaw.

SMYRNA, July 23.

The following is an extract from an authentic letter from Alexandria, dated the 14th of June.—"The captain bacha, fatigued with the length of his enterprize, and the resistance made by the inhabitants of Cairo, who excel in the art of defence, has granted peace to the rebel Beys, on certain conditions; the most important of which is, that Joazim and Murat Bey were to remain in the Upper Egypt till farther orders from the Porte. The old admiral has no cause to congratulate himself on such a peace; for immediately upon his departure, the rebel Beys, in defiance of the menaces of the Porte, will enter Lower Egypt; and render themselves absolute masters of that country. The captain bacha is preparing for his departure, and will quit Egypt the approaching seamazan. His ships are arming with the utmost celerity. We now find ourselves exposed to the greatest of all misfortunes; for there is no doubt but that the rebel Beys will direct against us the whole force of their rage and fury."

MAHON, July 17.

The last letters from Algiers, dated the 16th of last month, mention that the plague has made terrible havock in that place: from the 27th of April to the 14th of June, there have died of the plague 214 Christians, 1093 Jews, and 6748 persons. No business carried on, and the plague extended with uncommon violence to a camp which was formed near the place by the inhabitants, who wished to retire—scarcity threatens also, as there was a want of hands to attend to the cultivation of the lands.

LONDON, August 21.

The French commodore, after whose squadron there had been so many vague reports, returned to Brest the 19th instant, in the Superbe, of 74 guns, with all the other ships, except three small vessels gone to Africa, to be stationed to protect the trade.

The king of France, to soften the rigour of banishing his parliament to Troyes to his people, has made a display of many economical retrenchments in his houshold. Five of his palaces—Choisi, la Muette, Madrid, Vincennes and Blois, are to be sold by publick Vendue, or demolished. Besides this, all the houses belonging to his majesty at Paris, except the Louvre and the Thuillieries, are to be disposed of. The queen has made a retrenchment of nine hundred thousand livres annually.

Extract of a letter from Lisbon, Aug. 5.

"The French commodore remains here with the squadron: the two largest ships are taking in wines, and from hence they go, as related, to the coast of Africa and the East-Indies. Most of the smaller ships, are to return home, being only come out to exercise the ships or men, or probably to cover their true destination."

August 28. The day on which the notables met, will form an era in the liberties of France, which future historians may look to with astonishment. On that day, the monarchy of the country had its deepest wound: for then government had recourse to the people for power—the people, feeling it was in their hands, will keep what has been given them, and use it—in spite of opposition.—And what the notables began, the parliaments will finish.

Extract of a letter from Dunkirk, Aug. 21.

"A circumstance has just occurred, too interesting to escape notice. The troops that were coming to the frontiers of French Flanders are stopped in their present position. The foragers are ordered to suspend their operations, and all is at a stand. This said to be owing to some representations of the emperor's ambassador at Paris."

The lords of the admiralty, willing to maintain the respectability and energy of the royal navy, make it a rule to keep as many ships ready for sea as possible. By their doing so, the petty politicians of the times are led to pronounce, "that a war must be at hand." But were their lordships to pursue an opposite conduct, still the daily speculators would be apprehensive: they would then lament the probability of the nation's being drawn into a war while unprepared. It should seem, that these gentlemen are determined to complain at all events. Let them do so: it is a comfort that their approbation is very unworthy the ambition of an honest man. We shall certainly not be forced into a war the sooner for being fully prepared for one.

The fate of the parliament of Paris is the object which occupies the general attention! Their noble spirit, not at all subdued by change of place, was to re-assemble them at Troyes! This was to be on the 21st.

But, independent of the want of many constituents, as judges, advocates and procureurs, another meeting there became further unlikely, from a new menace of the court! viz

Letters de Cachet, to disperse the members individually through the kingdom! This was much apprehended.

The chamber of accounts, the court next in rank after the parliament, and cour des aides, have followed the example of the parliament, and protested against the enregisterment of the new edicts, as being null and void.

Null and void, therefore, probably will be this enormous stretch of arbitrary powers! Such is the popular sentiment of Paris! It finds an echo in every gentleman's breast throughout the world!

Monsieur, the king's brother, presided in the chamber of accounts; Monf. le comte d'Artois in the cour des aides. The expressions of applause on the former, and the sad marks of unpopularity with which the crowd meet the latter, the general freedom of political discussion now observable in every part of Paris; and this under the immediate cognizance of the military and the mouchards, the hired instruments of the police, all look like the harbingers of better times! The traveller, who has not been at Paris lately, would scarcely think it to be the metropolis of the same people!

The official retrenchments will have these effects.

The duc de Coigny loses a lucrative place. The marq. de Lambelle will be master of the horse.

From the stables and guards, 1000 horse and men are dismissed.

From the queen's establishment, 400.

M de Vaudreuil is no more grand falconer.

The poste aux lettres, poste aux chevaux, &c. are again united under the same intendant.—Their union is just two years old, to gratify the duc de Polignac. He now retires, the baron d Ogny succeeds. The national saving is above 400,000 livres.

This, as far as it goes, is well, and probably it will be better, as from hence Palmer's post plan, at least between London and Paris, is looked for with much hope!

The queen, though not without some struggle, has prevailed in regard to St. Cloud. This, the best situated and most convenient residence, is not to be sold.

The following very important intelligence we believe to be authentic, which declares, that advices have been received from sir James Harris, by the marquis of Carmarthen, one of his majesty's secretaries of state, containing information, that the emperor has signified his intention to the British ambassador at the Hague, that he, (the emperor) will not interfere in the present disputes respecting the parties in Holland, so long as France preserves a neutrality; and that the emperor has also declared, that although he should not direct his troops to be active for the present, yet he would not suffer any other powers those of England and Prussia to take any part in the present commotion, and that his determination was to support the stadtholder if it should appear necessary.

August 30. Yesterday morning general Fawcett set out from his house in Great George-street, for Germany; it is said to negociate for troops from Brunswick and Hesse-Cassel, to join the Prussian army.

Authentic advice from Paris, assure us, that since the charges brought against M. de Colonne on account of his administration, and the consequent resolution of the parliament, the king has put a stop to their proceedings in this matter, by taking the cognizance of it to himself, and prohibiting the parliament from further enquiry.

The parliament of Braincon having written a letter to the keeper of the seals in France to lay before the king, in which they assert, that it is contrary to their constitution to establish provincial assemblies in the county of Burgoyne; they therefore pray, that the states of the Franche comte may be convoked and assembled in their ancient form.

More manly conduct than that of the French parliament, in resisting an unpopular impost, tho' in opposition to the wishes of an arbitrary monarch, could not have been shewn. We boast of greater liberty, but do not display greater, nor perhaps on all occasions, equal spirit.

What renders this action the more spirited is, that the tax they disdained to sanction by their approbation, was not so oppressive and tyrannical as to alarm the nation, but of the very same nature with one which has passed our own parliament.

The national manners, indeed, of France, are undergoing a considerable revolution; at least if we may judge from the mutinous, or rather manly, conduct of the body of the people on the above-mentioned occasion. Perhaps this may justly be attributed to their fondness for, and consequently imitation of English manners.

The fact need not be doubted, that the emperor is amicably disposed towards the cause of the stadtholder. But his dispositions may be friendly without his taking an active part in re-instating his highness. Indeed, it is by no means probable that any hostilities (except those of mobbing and rioting) will be the result of the present dissentions in Holland. If the English and Prussians become mediators for the stadtholder, while the emperor looks on and wishes them success, affairs will doubtless terminate as Great-Britain and her friends wish them to do.

What have our neighbours of France gained by their political manœuvres during the last hundred year? Nothing but a severe taxation, and a conviction that their favorite projects end, like Alchemy, "in fumo?"—Louis XIV. struggled to obtain universal monarchy, but found himself obliged to abandon it with disgrace. Louis XV found every plan which his ministers had laid, baffled by the event of the great war of 1756. And his grandson, Louis XVI. (infinitely the worthiest man of the three) finds himself obliged to sell his pleasantest palaces, and what probably gives more pain, to burthen his subjects with an almost intolerable impost, in order to recruit those finances which the extravagance of the people around him, still more than the last expensive war, have ruined.

MANCHESTER, July 31.

A Physician at Warwick, who amused himself in farming, having a field of grass long mowed, and so spoiled by the rain, as to determine him to throw it on the dunghill, by advice ricked it, sprinkling one peck of salt on each load. He fed his lean cattle on it, but thinking the load unwholsome, ordered his servant to throw it as litter for fatting oxen. The next morning they were found to have eaten the litter, and neglected the good hay. This went on for four days, when the salt hay was consumed. The gentleman weighed his fatting beasts every week, and said they improved as much that week as any other. He has often tried the experiment of salting his hay when injured by continual rain, and has always found it attended with success.

AMERICA.

CHARLESTON, Oct. 16.

The three men, (Kelly, Westmore and Stewart) who were taken up at Mrs. Jones's plantation, at White Bluff, in Georgia, on suspicion of having attempted to counterfeit the paper medium of this state, have been convicted at Savannah, and are sentenced to be hanged.

Oct. 23. At the court of general sessions, which ended on Tuesday last, Jones, Williams and Quesenberry, were sentenced to be hanged to-morrow, 24th inst. The two constables, Johnston and Priest, ordered to be branded the first Tuesday in January.

Extract of a letter from New-Providence, dated October 3, 1787.

"I arrived here after a tedious passage, part of which we had very bad weather. This is one of the most miserable places on the earth; and if it was not for fish and a few wild pigeons, we should often go without a dinner. On the 27th August last we had a very severe hurricane, which destroyed a number of vessels in the harbour, also many houses and other property on shore. Lumber, rice and corn, are as cheap here as in Charleston."

ALEXANDRIA, Nov. 1.

At a meeting of a number of the freeholders of Frederick county, in the town of Winchester, on Monday the 22d day of October, 1787, being the day appointed for holding the general muster of the two regiments of militia. The muster being over, and the freeholders having retired to the court house, for the purpose of instructing delegates appointed to represent this county in the general assembly, relative to the constitution formed by the late fœderal convention, when Joseph Holmes, Gent. was elected in the chair—and upon mature deliberation, the following letter was unanimously agreed to:

To JOHN S. WOODCOCK and CHARLES MYNN THRUSTON, Esquires.

WE the freeholders of the county of Frederick, by chusing you our representatives in the assembly, have evinced our confidence in your, integrity and abilities for the general purposes of legislation. It is not a diminution of that confidence which at this important crisis induces us to instruct you. We conceive the voice of the people may give weight to the vote of the delegate.

From the commencement of the contest with Great-Britain till the conclusion of the war, which has ended so gloriously, we saw with pleasure the recommendations of Congress submitted to, more implicitly than the edicts of an absolute prince—during this period a confederation was formed, adequate to the purposes of its constitution, while disinterested patriotism universally prevailed—That this spirit should continue long unabated was not to be expected—History proves the necessity of a supreme power and efficacious laws in every state, and the best constituted confederacies ancient and modern have not been able to maintain internal peace, or exert their natural force with effect against foreign enemies, where each member of the union retained its sovereignty; but we need not recur to the histories of other nations for proof of these positions. Peace was no sooner restored that the fœderal government relaxed.—The wisest and most necessary recommendations of Congress, as well as their most solemn compacts have been either totally disregarded, or partially complied with; hence hath ensued a breach of faith both with respect to foreign nations and our own citizens. Hence that debility of government which our enemies regard with exultation, and our best patriots with anxious concern. And hence will inevitably ensue anarchy, confusion, and all the direful consequences of a dissolution of government; unless an effectual remedy be timely applied.—A noble effort has been made to reform, and an excellent plan proposed for our acceptance. The question ought not to be "is this plan perfect?" but "is it an improvement on our present system?" Perfection in human affairs is not to be hoped for. We conceive it is well calculated to secure to us our independence as a nation, and our civil rights as individuals. We conceive that without a more energetic fœderal government we cannot exist as a nation; and that if the present attempt to reform should fail, there is little prospect of success in future. Such being our sentiments, gentlemen, we instruct you to vote for holding a convention as early as possible, to whose consideration the proposed constitution may be submitted, and that you exert your utmost influence in opposition to those (if any such there are) who may attempt to frustrate a measure on which our peace, liberty, and safety essentially depend.

We are respectfully, Gentlemen, Yours, &c.

Signed by order of the meeting,

JOSEPH HOLMES, Chairman.

PROVIDENCE, Oct. 25.

On Monday last was replaced in the belfry of the Baptist Meeting house, in this town, a large and noble bell, weighing 2387 pounds, lately recast at the furnace Hope, in Scituate, in this state, about 12 miles from this town, with the assistance of Mr. Jesse Goddier, bell-founder of Connecticut. This is the largest bell ever cast in New-England, and furnishes an additional proof that there is no kind of manufacture but what may be carried to as full perfection in this country, as in Europe, notwithstanding the predilection which some have in favor of foreign productions to the injury of their native country.

RICHMOND, October 27.

Extract of a letter from a member of Congress, Oct. 18.

"We have a good prospect of selling 8 or 9 millions of federal lands for sinking the domestic debt—and now it seems quite probable that the cession of Virginia alone will extinguish the whole of that debt, great as it is—being thirty millions of dollars."

Philadelphia, Nov. 8.

Tuesday last the honorable Thomas M'Kean, Benjamin Rush, James Wilson, Hilary Baker, and George Latimer, esquires were elected to represent this city in the General Convention to be held for taking into consideration the proposed plan of government for the United States.

At a late meeting of the freeholders and other inhabitants of the city of Williamsburg in Virginia, it was resolved to be the opinion of that meeting, that a convention ought to be appointed for the purposes of deliberating on the measures recommended by the honorable Convention lately held at Philadelphia and that the said Convention ought also to be empowered to revise and amend the constitution of that commonwealth.

Extract of a letter from Trenton, Nov. 1.

"There is not the least probability that the tender will be taken off the Jersey paper money, but am inclined to think a law will pass, ordering all principal to be burned that may be paid into the Loan-office, which of consequence will lessen the quantity in circulation, and perhaps may be of some use in preventing it growing worse. I am informed it keeps in pretty good credit in the eastern part of the state. Both Houses have unanimously resolved, that delegates be appointed on the 4th Tuesday of this instant, to meet in convention at Trenton the 2d Tuesday in December. William Livingston, Esq; was yesterday appointed Governor."

When the president of the French parliament, in a most excellent spirited speech, signified their refusal to register the edict for a stamp duty, the count d'Artois, brother to the king, is said to have declared hastily, "If I were king, you should comply." To this the president, bowing respectfully, replied, "If you were king, I should say as I now do:—My heart is the people's, my understanding is my own, and my head is the king's."

Messrs. PRINTERS,

In compassion to a lady, who, under the signature of Kitty Hard-to-Please, has lately advertised the objects of her aversion in several public papers, and at the same time declares, she longs to be married,—you are requested to insert the following in your next.

BOB WHAT-YOU-PLEASE.

O KITTY! I'm the man for thee,
I'm neither tall nor slender,
Nor old, nor young—come treat with me,
I'm ready to surrender.

Nor grosly fat, nor ghostly spare,
Nor sedulous, nor slack, Miss;
Like puny boy, I am not fair,
Nor like an Indian black, Miss.

Plain common sense I do not lack,
And that's a lawful tender;
Yet I ne'er made an almanack,
Nor saw the witch of Endor.

No sober smock-fac'd lump am I,
That deems the bottle treason;
I'll stick to Bacchus till I die,
But will not drown my reason.

A decent bowl inspires the soul,
And makes us better spunk, Miss;
But he's a brute, beyond dispute,
Who grogs it till he's drunk, Miss.

So, Kitty, if I please your mind,
With you I'd like to winter,
And when you wish my place to find,
Enquire of Mr. Printer.

Two hundred dragoons of that Colonel were put to flight, and briskly pursued by 60 Americans, under the command of colonel Washington. Some months after, Tarleton being in the house of a farmer, spoke with much vanity respecting himself, and lightly of colonel Washington, saying, "He wished extremely to know his face." "It is a great pity then" replied a girl of the house, "that colonel Tarleton had not taken the pains to turn his head at Cowpens."

LANDS FOR SALE

IN MARYLAND.

THE subscriber has for sale, all that TRACT of LAND called Beall's Plantation and Bateman's Field (being part of Snowden's Reputation Supported) containing from a late survey 676 and a half acres, situate on the head of South river, Anne Arrundel county, about 3 miles from navigable water, 12 from the city of Annapolis, 28 from Baltimore town, 24 from George town, and about 7 from the Inspection Houses of Indian Landing and Queen Anne, is well adapted for corn, wheat, and particularly tobacco.

This Plantation has not been tenanted for 3 years is a most pleasing and desirable situation, and capable of great improvement at a small expence; there are 259 acres of timber land, a greater part of which is very valuable. The subscriber would prefer disposing of the whole in one lot; but has no objection to making several of it: the timber land is conveniently situated for making such divisions in equal proportions, & there are many pleasant situations for erecting different buildings; it is also well watered— A very good mill stream runs through it, and there is some meadow ground, and much more may be very readily made.

The improvements upon it are, a good dwelling house with three large rooms on each floor, kitchen, quarter, corn house, stables, tobacco house, and two very fine apple orchards, one of which contains 220 trees, together with a number of other valuable fruit trees.

A plan of this estate may be seen at Mr. Vachel Stevens, surveyor, Annapolis, who will shew the premises; also at Mess. William Patterson & Brother's, Baltimore, and further information had For price, terms, &c. apply to JOHN WADDINGTON,

Foreign Intelligence.

DUBLIN, Auguſt 24.

THE following very remarkable inſtance of honeſty in a poor, and ſeemingly diſtreſſed perſon, deſerves to be recorded. Saturday morning laſt a private gentleman, who lives not 100 miles from Aungier-ſtreet, ſtanding at his door, was accoſted by a man about forty years old, with a tattered blue coat, who aſked, 'If ſuch a perſon did not own that houſe?' 'Yes (anſwered the owner) what do you want with him?' 'Why, ſir (ſaid the ſtranger) here is a note payable to you by the bank, which I found about eight laſt night.' 'Where?' replied the gentleman, 'Where did you paſs (anſwered the ſtranger) at that time?' 'I came (ſaid the other) from Chapel-ſtreet, over the bridge, through Eſſex-ſtreet, Euſtace, and Great George's-ſtreets, ſtraight home, on the left ſide of the way, all along.' 'Then the note is your's (replied the man) for I found it on the ſtep of the meeting-houſe in Euſtace-ſtreet.' The gentleman looked in his pocket-book, and perceived his loſs, though he could not recollect the number, having omitted to take it down. The note might have been diſcounted, being payable to the bearer only, and was for 78l. 9s. 2d. The gentleman, aſtoniſhed at ſo extraordinary an example of integrity in a wretched object, brought him into the parlour, gave him a bumper of wine with a piece of bread, which he greedily devoured; the gentleman then preſented him with five guineas, which the poor creature received with grateful exultation, crying out, 'the Lord be praiſed, this money is my own.' We are not at liberty to mention farther particulars relative to this generous perſon; but common juſtice requires us to declare, that the name of the poor object is Anthony Halloran, once a laborious lime burner in the county of Wexford, and being out of employ till he was almoſt ſtarved, crawled to Dublin in ſearch of work. To every poor, and even rich man, we may ſay, 'Go and do thou likewiſe.'

UTRECHT, Auguſt 11.

A number of couriers have ſucceſſively arrived at the Hague from Verſailles. The general report is, his moſt Chriſtian majeſty, who takes the moſt lively intereſt in the fate of the republic, has declared to the Pruſſian miniſter, that he cannot behold the march of the troops againſt Holland with an eye of ſatisfaction; that he deſires his Pruſſian majeſty to ſuſpend his reſolution on that buſineſs, that the ſtrict bonds by which the two courts had ſo long been united, may not run the riſk of being unavoidably broken.

LONDON, Auguſt 21.

Narrative of the eſcape of the Counteſs VALOIS DE LA MOTTE out of the Baſtile. Written by Herſelf.

THE Counteſs is perhaps the firſt and only priſoner who ever could find the way out of that place of confinement. The peculiar conſtruction of the building, the number of gates, and the multitude of guards always on the watch, precluded all poſſibility of a return to the world. But what cannot be effected with the aſſiſtance of friends in power, and of money?

For ſeveral months before the Counteſs was in poſſeſſion of the neceſſary apparatus; but the private inſtructions ſhe received from time to time, and the daily expectation ſhe was in of receiving ſeveral papers indiſpenſible for her juſtification, obliged her to put off the much wiſhed for event.

At laſt the happy day arrived, and ſhe gave the faithful Maria Anne, her woman, every neceſſary inſtruction, not wiſhing to have her as a companion through the windings of the infernal labyrinth, leſt that perſon, being univerſally known, ſhould occaſion a fatal diſcovery. The Counteſs agreed upon a place of meeting, dreſſed herſelf in man's clothes, cut the front part of her hair in the ſhape uſually worn by jockies in Paris; and thus equipped, her head buried as it were in a large round hat, half boots on her legs, and a ſmall ſwitch in her hand, ſhe boldly ventured forth, reſolved, and being armed for that purpoſe, to die rather than be taken.

After having opened and ſhut after her ſeven different gates, ſhe at laſt reached an immenſe yard filled with ſiſters, ſo they called the female Cerberi of the place. She addreſſed herſelf to one of them, and diſguiſing both her voice and pronunciation, put a piece of gold in her hand, enquiring for her way to the Chapel, where ſhe arrived at laſt, after paying proper tolls at the other gates. Leſt ſhe ſhould be known to ſome of the ſiſterhood, ſhe mixed as faſt as ſhe could with a numerous company of viſitors then buſy in viewing what curioſities there were to be ſeen. With the whole groupe ſhe was conveyed by one of the ſiſters to the outward gate called Partes de Champs. There ſhe met her good Maria-Anne, took boat with her, and croſſed to the oppoſite ſhore.

Notwithſtanding her enfeebled ſtate, the Counteſs had ſtrength enough to walk as far as Charanton, about ſix miles. They then got into a cart, which carried them three leagues farther. It was impoſſible, nay dangerous for the two travellers to attempt getting a convenient carriage, and therefore they travelled again on foot the ſpace of 20 miles. Worn out with fatigue, their feet in a moſt deplorable condition, they were glad to put up at a miſerable public houſe on the road, and there reſt the whole night.

The next day they mounted a dung cart, which was going four leagues up the country. There they met with ſome good natured waggoners, who gave them a caſt. The Counteſs being apprehenſive, leſt ſhe ſhould be traced, and her dreſs deſcribed, bought in the firſt place they ſtopped at, the ſimple dreſs of a country girl. The only remaining difficulty was to effect the transformation. For this purpoſe, ſhe left the town where ſhe had thus provided herſelf, walked on about three leagues, and then leaving the high road, retired behind a hill, and there changed her clothes, hiding amongſt the brambles her manly accoutrements. She then reſumed her pedeſtrian journey. Among numberleſs fatigues, and much anxiety, avoiding the large towns, putting up at the moſt wretched hovels, travelling ſometimes in carts, oftener on foot; compelled through the inhumanity of a publican, who would not open his door after 12 o'clock, to paſs a whole night on the naked earth in Colomby foreſt, near Luxemburgh; ſhe at laſt reached the city of Luxemburgh; and from thence a ſmall village called Holriſh, where they remained ſix weeks, under the aſſumed name of Mademoiſelle de Dulan, at one Madame Chiltz's, who treated her in every reſpect with ſo much humanity, as muſt for ever engage her utmoſt gratitude.

No ſooner was the Count, her huſband, appriſed of her retreat, than he diſpatched after her a truſty perſon, to bring her over to London, where ſhe arrived on Saturday the 4th inſtant.

Laſt week, a gentleman in Glaſgow, received from a gentleman in Virginia, a remittance for a debt contracted before the late war, with the whole intereſt thereon, which amounted to a conſiderable ſum. This is an inſtance, that there are yet ſome honeſt people in Virginia, and that a good deal of the American debts may be recovered, which is good news to merchants in general.

Auguſt 21. France may determine to ſupport the patriotic party in Holland at every hazard, and to march an army of 40 000 men to their relief, if the Pruſſian troops do not halt at Cleves, but it muſt be known to them, that his Pruſſian majeſty can double their number of troops, in the moſt advantageous poſitions, before any force can be collected from the French garriſons to oppoſe him.

The duke of Brunſwick was with the flower of the Pruſſian army at Weſel on the 6th inſt. whence he proceeded to Nimeguen, to conſult with the prince and princeſs of Orange, on the ſteps moſt proper to be taken for carrying his Pruſſian majeſty's intentions into execution.

The troops are moſt admirably appointed, particularly the Huſſars, all in ſuch health and high ſpirits, with the ſanguine hopes of rolling in the riches of the Dutch. The Huſſars have but little pay, their profits therefore, ariſe ſolely from plunder.

The army of Tippo Saib, in India, it is ſaid, hath been put to flight, with great ſlaughter, by the Mahrattas.

The St. Joſeph, a Portugueſe frigate, has taken and carried into St. Ubes, an Algerine galley of 24 guns and 130 men, after an engagement of two hours, in which moſt of the Algerines were either killed or wounded. Both veſſels were nearly ſhattered to pieces.

The inſurance from London to the Weſt Indies, and any part of America, is now done at 5l. per cent.

Sept. 1. The preſent ſituation of this country mark the wiſdom and ſpirit of thoſe who are entruſted with the government of it. The bare poſſibility of a war finds us prepared for it; and it is this ſtate of preparation which will preſerve us in peace.

We hear from Paris, that all the advocates and ſolicitors have reſolved to ſuſpend their functions in the judiciary courts, in conſequence of the arret of parliament.

The arret concludes by declaring null, illegal, and contrary to the true intereſts of the nation, the tranſcriptions made the 22d of Auguſt on the regiſters; nevertheleſs, humbly ſupplicating his majeſty, that he would be pleaſed to aſſemble the ſtates general previouſly to the eſtabliſhment and collection of the new impoſts, and to recal the members of the parliament.

The ſtamp edict, and the declaration of the territorial impoſt, have not yet been preſented to the Chatelet, to be regiſtered. This juriſdiction has reſolved to addreſs itſelf to the Garde des Sceaux, and to requeſt, that in the name of the Chatelet, the moſt humble repreſentations may be made to the king, relative to the exile of the parliament, and that his majeſty may be entreated to reſtore to the capital its magiſtrates.

Earl Cornwallis, the preſent governour-general of India, when in Germany the laſt continental war, was for ſome time diſabled from active ſervice by a ſevere attack of the rheumatiſm, which totally deprived him of the uſe of his limbs. His lordſhip, in travelling over a precipice, had the good fortune to be overturned in his carriage, which rolled with him above an hundred yards into the vale beneath: we ſay the good fortune—for the ſhock, acting electrically, enabled his lordſhip to walk up the hill, perfectly cured of his rheumatic complaint.

Extract of a letter from Belgrade, July 25.

"They write from Trebiſonde, that there is ſtill a branch of the Imperial family of the Commenes left. In the preſent circumſtances the ſetting up of ſo illuſtrious a pretender might prove very fatal to the Porte. The Commenes were an ancient Greek family, many of whoſe deſcendants filled the throne of Conſtantinople after the ſceptre was taken away from them. Some individuals of the family ſettled in Greece, where on account of their origin much reſpect was ſhewn them; other branches retired into Aſia and to Trebiſonde. It is in this laſt city they think the branch which has the greateſt pretenſions to the throne has taken refuge. Mahomet the Second, who rendered himſelf maſter of Conſtantinople in 1453, politically endeavoured to deſtroy the remains of this family, who always bore the names of the Greek Emperors; and if he did not ſucceed in their entire deſtruction, he made people believe that he had left none remaining."

The opinions and reports both of Mr. Grenville and ſir James Harris meet at one point upon the Dutch affairs—that if peace can by mediation be reſtored it too probably will be but of ſhort duration—the temper of the people is decidedly for a revolution of government.

The condition of the Dutch provinces remains as before—equally divided—out of ſeven, three and a half being for the Stadtholder, and three and a half againſt him.

The lateſt advices from France ſay, that the parliament of Bourdeaux have iſſued an arret, dated the 11th of Auguſt, ſtrictly forbidding the opening or holding of a provincial aſſembly, which they have ſignified in form to the duke D'Ayen, who was appointed to be preſident. In conſequence of which act of diſobedience, the French king has ordered letters de catchet to be ſent, exiling each of them to Libourne.

If the flame of liberty ſhould, as it has been predicted, now break out in France, it is remarkable, that it will have originated from a ſtamp act, which was the meaſure that firſt kindled all the American diſorders.

The preſident Du Patt, who lately ſaved from the torture of being broke upon the wheel, according to their ſentence, three unfortunate victims of the error, ignorance or prejudice of their firſt judges, has lately publiſhed a memorial in juſtification of the memory of ſeven wretches, four of whom were hanged, and three ſent to the galleys for life, for a ſuppoſed robbery committed eighteen years ago, and which it now appears was perpetrated by a gang of Gypſies, or as they are called in France, Bohemians, who, having been apprehended in September laſt, lately confeſſed that they alone, with a ſcorce of their comrades, had been guilty of the offence for which ſeven innocent fathers of families had been ſacrificed in the year 1769.

The ſcene of the above judicial murder was Phaſburgh, a ſmall but ſtrong town belonging to the French, and ſituate between Lorraine and Alſace. The plaintiffs were two Jews, who had the reputation of being very rich, and were robbed on the 25th of September 1768, to the amount, as they ſaid, of near two thouſand pounds. It was on their depoſitions alone, without the leaſt evidence being brought in ſupport of the charge, that ſeven quiet and uſeful huſbandmen were torn from their wives and families, barbarouſly tortured, and at laſt conſigned over to death and ſhame, and their wretched ſurvivors to diſgrace and poverty.

On Monday laſt Monſ. de Calonne, accompanied by ſeveral foreigners of diſtinction, viſited Weſtminſter Abbey; and after viewing the monuments and other curioſities of that venerable pile, proceeded to the Tower, where they remained ſome hours, and on their return weſtward they ſaw the inſide of St. Stephen's, Walbrook.

The American farmer ſays, that out of twelve families that emigrate from Germany, Scotland and Ireland, to America, generally ſeven Scotch will ſucceed nine German and four Iriſh. This calculation muſt eminently diſplay not only the author's extreme penetration, but alſo the character of the three nations: he ſays the Scotch are frugal and laborious, but their wives cannot work ſo hard as German women, who, on the contrary, vie with their huſbands and often ſhare with them the moſt ſevere toils of the field, which they underſtand better. The Iriſh do not proſper ſo well, they love drinking and are litigious, and ſoon take to the gun, which is the ruin of every thing.

HELEMSLEY-BLACMORE, July 27.

On Tueſday laſt, a little paſt four in the afternoon, we were in a very ſudden manner alarmed by an uncommon large body of water coming down Church-ſtreet in this town, and with ſuch a monſtrous height and rapidity as to bear down all before it. The courſe which it took was down a ſmall rivulet, called Borough-Beck, that runs conſtantly through the ſtreet above-mentioned, from north to ſouth, and which might have been paſſed juſt before the flood came in ſeveral places of it, dry-ſhod; and although we had that day ſeveral pretty heavy ſhowers, yet it was far from being, that weight of rain to imagine ſuch an inundation following: we muſt therefore ſuppoſe it to have been occaſioned by the burſting of a cloud upon the Moor, about two or three miles above the town, as a very large crack of thunder was heard in that quarter about 20 minutes before the water came. The ſcene which it occaſioned was truly affecting to thoſe ſpectators of it who lived beyond its reach, to behold the houſes of their fellow creatures in a moment ſurrounded with water, and who had ſcarce time to eſcape up to their chambers to avoid its fury in their lower rooms, which it immediately filled. Others, chiefly poor people, who had no upper rooms to flee unto, were under the dreadful neceſſity of plunging inſtantaneouſly into the water, to avoid immediate drowning, dragging their infant children after them, and combating the water up to the waiſt to reach a place of ſafety. Others, who got out of their houſes, were arreſted in their efforts to eſcape by the torrent, and obliged to place themſelves on the walls or any elevated ſpot they could. The ſituation of ſuch was very alarming, expecting every moment to be waſhed away by the rapidity of the flood, but they were at laſt happily extricated from their danger, by ſome people who carried them away on horſeback, although at great peril; and ſuch as had fled to their chambers were taken therefrom in like manner. By the bleſſing of Providence no lives were loſt; but had it happened in the night time from the diſcription given, and which is far from being exaggerated, the conſequences would have been dreadful in the extreme, and whole families, it is feared, entirely ſwept away. The immenſity of it was ſuch as to force a very conſiderable portion of water through the market-place (behind which, on the weſt ſide, the brook runs) covering nearly the whole of it, and forcing its way with fury almoſt incredible. This was in a great meaſure occaſioned by a waggon being taken out of Church ſtreet by the rapidity of the current, and carried down by it until it was ſtopped againſt a bridge, which was a providential circumſtance, as by dividing the main force of the flood, it undoubtedly prevented the deſtruction of many houſes, and was the means of preſerving the lives of ſeveral who would have ſhared in the deſtruction. Much furniture is deſtroyed and ſwept away, and ſome poor families almoſt loſt their all, and their dwelling houſes broken down and rendered at preſent uninhabitable. A malt kiln belonging to Mr. Bickering, common brewer here, ſituated acroſs the rivulet, is in a great degree waſhed away, together with a quantity of malt, oats, brewing untenſils, barrels of ale, &c. &c. a conſiderable quantity of ale is alſo deſtroyed in the cellars of ſeveral inns, which were filled with water. The divers bridges acroſs the brook, ſome of which were made for the convenience of carriages to paſs over, have their battlements entirely ſwept away, and their foundations much injured. The covered arch at the lower end of the town, through which the rivulet diſcharges itſelf into the river Rye, is greatly broke down, and the foundation ſo ſhattered as not to be able to allow any carriages at preſent coming upon it. The flood raged with unabating violence for an hour, and then gradually declined, and is now reduced to its uſual ſtream.

AMERICA.

BOSTON, October 29.

A correſpondent obſerves, That ſome perſons affect to call in queſtion the right of the late Continental Convention to make a conſtitution for the ſtates.—But the great enquiry with every friend to the country is, whether patching up the confederation could poſſibly have brought it to be a conſtitution adequate to the great purpoſes of a national government? It is evident that the convention thought it never could be worked into ſhape: like a maſs of broken glaſs, there is no poſſible way to form it into veſſels, but by conſolidating the parts, and blending the whole over anew.

AMERICA is at this diſtreſſing period, like the merchant in the goſpel ſeeking goodly pearls: that pearl to us is an EFFICIENT fœderal government.—Of what conſequence is it to us where or how this JEWEL is diſcovered? if it deſcends from above, or if men inſpired from above, produce for our acceptance, this ineſtimable pearl, ſhall we cavil about the medium through which it is preſented to us? We have "ſold all that we had," that is, we are as men deſtitute of every bleſſing attendant on good government; but as a compenſation for all our toils, loſſes, ſacrifices, wars and bloodſhed, behold the PEARL OF GREAT PRICE, put into our hands: let us not be like the fool into whoſe hands ſuch a price is delivered, who hath no heart to improve it. All power is derived from the people, that is its only legitimate ſource.—The AMERICAN CONSTITUTION is accordingly to be preſented to THE PEOPLE for their adoption or rejection; this will give it its proper baſis; and may a ſpirit of ſerious enquiry and conſideration pervade all ranks of people, that they may diſcern "the things that belong to their peace, before they are hidden from their eyes."

If proper attention is paid by the people at large, to the general character and conduct of the opponents to the AMERICAN CONSTITUTION, it will greatly ſubſerve the cauſe of truth and freedom: many perſons will and do declaim againſt it, who ſo far from having attentively examined it, have never read it.—A few queſtions will forever ſilence ſuch characters, if they are not deſtitute of modeſty; others will oppoſe it from a ſpirit of mere contradiction, and to be ſingular, ſuch perſons ought to be deſpiſed for their levity in trifling with ſo momentous a ſubject; ſuch characters are every where to be met with; they never could be conſidered as the friends of mankind.—But the ſelfiſh motives which will actuate the greateſt number of enemies to this conſtitution cannot be reckoned; however, ſo far as any perſon's oppoſition can be traced to an intereſted, partial or local inducement, no credit ought in juſtice to be given to their obſervations. Great art will be uſed to varniſh over the ſecret ſprings of oppoſition, but a retroſpective examination of a man's principles, conduct and ſituation, will lead to the fulleſt inveſtigation of his views and deſigns.

His excellency the governor, with advice of council, has been pleaſed to appoint Thurſday, the 29th of November next, to be obſerved throughout this commonwealth, as a day of public thankſgiving and praiſe.

Wedneſday laſt, a committee of both houſes was appointed, conſiſting of the honourable Mr. Wood and the honourable Mr. Auſtin, on the part of the ſenate—Juſtice Carnes, Doctor Coney and Mr. Clark, on the part of the houſe, to bring in a bill for regulating the practice of the law in this commonwealth; and for eſtabliſhing fees for attorneys, practitioners and witneſſes.

Yeſterday, we hear, the honourable ſenate accepted the report of the committee in favour of the petition of the honourable George Cabot, Eſquire, and others, for building a bridge acroſs the river at Beverly-ferry.

The firſt regiment of militia in Suffolk, being deſtitute of field officers, a number of captains, fired with a laudable ambition to diſcharge their duty, as far as in their own power, agreed on a voluntary field-day, and Wedneſday laſt was appointed for the purpoſe—when the troop of light horſe commanded by captain Tyler, company of artillery under the command of captain Spooner, militia companies of the town of Roxbury, commanded by captains Draper, Williams and Ruggles, and company of Brookline, commanded by captain White, the whole put under the immediate command of captain Spooner, paraded on the north end of Jamaica-Plain in Roxbury——Beſides the cavalry and artillery, two of the militia companies were in complete uniform.

The line having been formed with expedition and regularity, and the troops having performed the manuel exerciſe, and ſome manœuvres, a mock action was exhibited, the light troops advancing, began the action; as if overpowered by numbers, they retreated to the main body, on which a cannonade and fire of ſmall arms, by platoons, commenced; this was ſucceeded by a promiſcuous fire of cannon and muſquetry continued for ſome time—the horſe making an impetuous charge, ſword in hand. The whole was conducted in a manner which did honour to the officers and men of the reſpective corps, and to the general ſatisfaction of a great number of ſpectators drawn together on the occaſion.

The preſent prevailing military ſpirit throughout this commonwealth, cannot but afford real pleaſure to every lover of his country, as to all her advantages, this ſpirit will render her citizens her defence.

Yeſterday the corps of light-infantry, commanded by captain Otis, paraded, and at ten o'clock marched for Cambridge by the way of Roxbury, where they dined; and returned to town at ſix o'clock, over the bridge.

It is a fact as true as conſolatory, that the internal reſources of America never were in ſo flouriſhing a ſtate as at preſent. The wounds of the war are in a great degree healed; the ſtock on our farms, which has been leſſened by it, is replaced; and every traveller agrees that there are more acres of land (in the ſeveral ſtates) under tillage this year than were ever known to be cultivated in a ſeaſon ſince the firſt white man ſet foot on the continent. Heaven has ſmiled ſingularly upon our harveſts, and, in ſpite of all our grumbling, will enable, if not compel us, to pay our juſt debts.

HARTFORD, October 29.

A correſpondent obſerves, it is a circumſtance much to the honor of Connecticut, that we are the firſt ſtate in the union, who have received the new conſtitution in the regular channel, have coolly and deliberately, without any diſturbance or commotion, taken the proper meaſures for calling a ſtate convention, and determining upon the new plan of government. The convention are to meet for the moſt important purpoſe, that can command the attention of any people. The queſtion which they are to reſolve is no leſs than this: Shall union render us reſpectable and happy, or ſhall diſcord and diviſion make us weak, contemptible and wretched! For reſolving this important queſtion, theſe ought be appointed, whoſe tried abilities and integrity entitle them to the full confidence of the people. We are not fettered in our choice. Perſons of ſuch a character may be choſen, whatever office they may hold in the ſtate. No perſons ſtand fairer for an appointment than the judges of the Superiour court. In addition to their other qualifications, they poſſeſs the advantage of being more free from bias and partiality, than any other perſons who are in civil office in the ſtate. As they are excluded from being members of the legiſlature, the queſtion with them will be, not what will give moſt power to the ſtate legiſlature, of which I am and hope to be, a member; but what is moſt for the real intereſt of this country. Thoſe who are under the bias of intereſt MAY do right; but men of abilities and integrity, who are free from ſuch a bias WILL do right.

POUGHKEEPSIE, Oct. 31.

On Thurſday morning the regiment commanded by colonel Van Bunſchoten, paraded at this place, and at 12 o'clock marched to a field adjacent to the town, where they were formed into two battalions; and to the great ſatisfaction of the numerous ſpectators, they performed the ſeveral evolutions with the moſt accurate exactneſs, which did the greateſt honor to both officers and men. Their appearance and conduct was ſuch, while in the field, that many gentlemen who were unconcerned, and ſome ſtrangers, declared they exceeded their moſt ſanguine expectations, and were more like regular troops than new militia.

The exerciſe of the day being over, they were marched from the field through the town, in platoons; when each company were conducted by their reſpective officers from the regiment, and after an handſome treat, were diſcharged, when they retired in the greateſt good humour to their reſpective homes, ſeemingly well ſatisfied with their own conduct, and eſpecially that of their officers.

YORK, (Pennſylvania) October 31.

We have been greatly ſurpriſed at the induſtry with which reports have been propagated that the York Academy was on the decline; theſe reports are utterly groundleſs. On the contrary this ſeminary has been riſing daily in public eſtimation ever ſince its foundation, and is at the preſent time in a very flouriſhing ſituation. Its pupils are numerous and under the tuition of maſters highly approved for their ability, experience and induſtry. Youth are boarded and taught on cheaper terms than at any other ſeminary which we know of, and their education rendered as complete. The markets at York are low, and the inhabitants grave, ſober, induſtrious and exemplary in their morals. Theſe circumſtances have concurred to promote the reputation and importance of this inſtitution, and the rank of its pupils (being ſons of gentlemen of the firſt conſequence in this and the neighbouring ſtates) is a flattering teſtimony in its behalf.

BALTIMORE, Nov. 2.

On Tueſday laſt, between 6 and 7 o'clock in the evening, died in a manner ſudden and unexpected, Mrs Elizabeth Meſſonnier, the amiable conſort of Mr. Henry Meſſonnier, merchant, and juſtly beloved daughter of Dr. Charles Frederick Wieſenthall. She was attacked in the night with a violent Aſthma, joined with the moſt threatening ſymptoms, which, however, gradually ſubſided, giving an almoſt certain expectation of a ſpeedy recovery, in ſuch a manner, that according to her own feelings, ſhe deemed it unneceſſary to have any body ſit up with her the following night. She bade a good night, with a ſatisfactory ſmile, to her parents—but alas! they were hardly at the foot of the ſtairs, when they were called back again, and found her in that ſmall interval of time, already expired, without a ſingle groan, or the leaſt token or call, retaining ſtill that placid, ſmiling countenance in her features, with which ſhe had but juſt now diſmiſſed her parents!—In the character of a wife, ſhe was truly amiable and affectionate; and as a child, ſhe was the moſt dutiful to her parents, avoiding with the greateſt care, every thing that would make them uneaſy. In common life, her deportment was ſuch, that even malice itſelf would bluſh, if it could. She was entirely free from that low and abominable practice of injuring her neighbour's good fame by malicious aſperſions; and even the day ſhe died, whilſt ſhe was in the greateſt pain, ſhe was heard to expreſs herſelf, that ſhe ſhuddered at the thoughts of what would be the lot of thoſe venomous tongues, who ſo readily and ſo bitterly beſpatter their neighbours whom they diſlike. The goodneſs of her heart makes her loſs the more ſeverely felt, as ſhe was, and would have been, an agreeable friend to her acquaintance—the pride of her huſband—and the comfort of an aged diſtreſſed father.

Philadelphia, Nov. 9.

In the courſe of a few days paſt, the city has been repeatedly alarmed with the cry of fire, and two houſes have been burnt to the ground, beſides conſiderable injury being done to the adjacent buildings. As the unjuſtifiable neglect of ſweeping the chimnies has been the cauſe of theſe alarms, it is earneſtly hoped that every citizen will reflect how idle it is to riſque his own property, and how wicked to involve his neighbour's, in the ruinous conſequences of that neglect. It is neither an expenſive nor very inconvenient duty that is requiſite to prevent ſuch accidents; and a correſpondent wiſhes to ſuggeſt to the different Fire Companies a mode of making it the intereſt of the pooreſt perſon to comply with the wholeſome, but ſeemingly obſolete regulations of the law. To prevent is better than to ſuppreſs an evil. Let it then be an indiſpenſible article in theſe aſſociations, that they will upon every occaſion of fire exert themſelves to impoſe and collect the penalty inflicted upon delinquents; for it is the impunity which makes the frequency of the offence.

About the middle of May laſt, as a labourer was repairing a hedge in the environs of Vienna in Germany, he obſerved a genteel man, with a ſword by his ſide, enter the field; and as he imagined a duel was intended, he concealed himſelf within the hedge. Soon after the gentleman came near the place where he lay, and took a paper out of his pocket, which after reading he tore. He then pulled out a piſtol, looked at the priming, and beat the flint with a key. After throwing his hat on the ground, he clapped the piſtol to his head, but it only fleſhing in the pan, the perſon who was concealed ran up to him and laid hold of the piſtol: upon which the gentleman drew his ſword upon the poor man who told him, He feared death as little as he did, and had more courage, for that he had lived twenty years in pain and miſery, and left it to God to put an end to them. The gentleman was ſo ſtruck with the rebuke, that he burſt into tears, gave the man a purſe of ducats, took down his name where to find him, and made him ſwear never to take any notice of him, if at any time he ſhould chance to meet him.

Extract from a New Edition of the POEMS of BURNS, the Ayrſhire Plowman, lately publiſhed in England.

MAN WAS MADE TO MOURN.

A DIRGE.

WHEN chill November's ſurly blaſt
Made fields and foreſts bare,
One ev'ning as I wander'd forth,
Along the banks of Ayr,
I ſpy'd a man, whoſe aged ſtep
Seem'd weary, worn with care;
His face was furrow'd o'er with years,
And hoary was his hair.

Young ſtranger, whither wand'reſt thou?
Began the rev'rend ſage;
Does thirſt of wealth thy ſtep conſtrain,
Or youthful Pleaſure's rage?
Or haply, preſt with cares and woe,
Too ſoon thou haſt begun
To wander forth, with me to moan
The miſeries of Man.

The ſun that overhangs yon moors,
Out-ſpreading far and wide,
Where hundreds labour to ſupport
A haughty lordling's pride;
I've ſeen yon weary winter-ſun
Twice forty times return;
And ev'ry time have added proofs,
That Man was made to mourn.

O Man! while in thy early years,
How prodigal of time!
Miſ-ſpending all the precious hours,
Thy glorious, youthful prime!
Alternate follies take the ſway;
Licentious paſſions burn;
Which tenfold force gives Nature's law,
That Man was made to mourn.

Look not alone on youthful prime,
Or manhood's active might;
Man then is uſeful to his kind,
Supported is his right;
But ſee him on the edge of life,
With cares and ſorrows worn,
Then Age and Want, oh! ill match'd pair!
Shew Man was made to mourn!

A few ſeem favourites of Fate,
In Pleaſure's lap careſt;
Yet, think not all the rich and great
Are likewiſe truly bleſt.
But, oh! what crouds in ev'ry land,
All wretched and forlorn,
Thro' weary life this leſſon learn,
That Man was made to mourn!

Many and ſharp the num'rous ills
Inwoven in our frame!
More pointed ſtill we make ourſelves,
Regret, remorſe and ſhame!
And Man, whoſe heav'n-erected face
The ſmiles of love adorn,
Man's inhumanity to Man
Makes countleſs thouſands mourn!

See yonder poor, o'er-labour'd wight,
So abject, mean and vile,
Who begs a brother of the earth
To give him leave to toil;
And ſee his lordly fellow worm
The poor petition ſpurn,
Unmindful, though a weeping wife
And helpleſs offspring mourn.

If I'm deſign'd yon lordling's ſlave,
By Nature's law deſign'd,
Why was an independent wiſh
E'er planted in my mind?
If not, why am I ſubject to
His cruelty or ſcorn?
Or why has Man the will and pow'r
To make his fellow mourn?

Yet let not this too much, my ſon,
Diſturb thy youthful breaſt:
This partial view of human-kind
Is ſurely not the laſt!
The poor, oppreſſed, honeſt man
Had never, ſure, been born,
Had there not been ſome recompence
To comfort thoſe that mourn!

O Death! the poor man's deareſt friend,
The kindeſt and the beſt!
Welcome the hour, my aged limbs
Are laid with thee at reſt!
The great, the wealthy fear thy blow,
From pomp and pleaſure torn!
But, oh! a bleſt relief for thoſe
That weary-laden mourn!

From the London Evening Poſt.

DEFINITIONS OF MAN.

MANY grave authors, from the time of Pliny to the preſent day, have amuſed themſelves with defining Man. Boſwell ſays, he is a cooking animal, becauſe no other animal can cook. Doctor Franklin ſays, he is a tool-making animal, becauſe no other animal makes an inſtrument by which he can make another inſtrument.—A man at Cambridge defines him "an animal that draws an inference." Two of his pupils walking out immediately after the lecture, obſerved written upon a ſign, "Wiſeman, Drawing-maſter." They went into his houſe, and aſked him ſeveral queſtions relative to his talents; among others,—If he could draw an inference?—At this he ſeemed embarraſſed, and frankly owned, that he could not draw that which he had never ſeen, nor knew any thing of. They left the drawing-maſter; and meeting in Bridge-ſtreet with a large ſtrong horſe in the ſhafts of a brewer's dray, clapped him on the back, and admired his ſtrength; to which the driver much attended; till at laſt they aſked him, "If his horſe could draw an inference? The drayman was at firſt at a loſs; but at laſt declared, he was ſure his horſe could draw any thing in REASON. This ſatisfied them, and they returned to their maſter; one of them accoſting him in the following ſpeech:—Maſter, we are now convinced that your definition is naught. We have found a man, and a wiſe man too, who cannot draw an inference; and we have met with a horſe who can.

Philadelphia, October 16, 1787.
For Griſt Mills & other Water Works
On an extenſive Plan,
One of the beſt ſituations in America is offered
FOR SALE,
Together With
Batſto Iron-Works,
At the forks of Little Egg-Harbour river, one of the moſt healthy ſpots in New Jerſey, 38 miles by land from Philadelphia, and within a few hours ſail of New York.

THE river, communicating with the ſea by the beſt inlet on the Jerſey coaſt, is navigable for veſſels of 200 tons within a few miles of the works; thoſe of 100 tons may approach within one mile; flats and ſcows, carrying 10 or 12 tons, load and unload at the works. The uſual freight to New York or Philadelphia is 10 ſhillings per ton. The furnace ſtream affords plenty of water, in the dryeſt ſeaſon, for 3 or 4 pair of mill ſtones, beſides ſupplying the iron works.——An excellent dam, which has been increaſing in ſtrength many years by the cinder from the furnace, is well ſecured from the danger of freſhes, and the works are ſcarcely ever injured or delayed by either ice or back-water, though the tide ſwells to the foot of the dam: mills may therefore be erected at a moderate expence. This being a part of the country in which many people and many teams are neceſſarily employed in collecting and preparing for market the iron and lumber with which it abounds, and at the ſame time illy adapted to the raiſing of grain for their ſupport, there is, and muſt continue to be, a demand for large quantities of midlings, cornell, ſhorts and bran, at advanced prices; and the conveniencp of conveying flour at a light expence, either to New York or Philadelphia, or to more diſtant markets, will not be overlooked nor conſidered as of ſmall importance, eſpecially as there are few mill ſeats of any conſiderable capacity equally adapted to the New York market, which is not unfrequently ſupplied with ſuperfine flour from Philadelphia. A choice of the various kinds of wheat may be drawn to this ſeat from Virginia, Maryland, Delaware, New Jerſey, and New York with greater eaſe and convenience than to almoſt any other mills now in being.

The FURNACE, which by the extenſive lands annexed to it, is abundantly ſupplied with wood and ore, is now in blaſt, and is noted for producing the beſt hollow ware in America, the metal being peculiarly well adapted to the making of caſtings of all kinds, as well as excellent bar iron.

A FORGE, with four fires and two hammers, belongs to the eſtate, and ſtands about half a mile from the furnace, on another fine ſtream which affords plenty of water.

A SLITTING and ROLLING MILL, having been diſuſed for the laſt two or three years, may want ſome repairs to prepare it for uſe; but the fore-bays and gates are in perfect order, and being in the proper ſpot for griſt mills, may be appropriated to that uſe.

Two SAW MILLS in good order, and a ſmall Griſt Mill.

The MANSION HOUSE is elegantly ſituated about 100 yards from the furnace, on an height which commands a view of the whole works, and of the two villages formed by the ſurrounding buildings belonging to the eſtate, ſuch as barns, ſtables, coal houſes, workſhops, ſtorehouſes and dwellings for work men. Adjoining the manſion houſe is a large and fruitful garden, affording plenty of vegetables, and well ſtored with choſen fruit trees; alſo a young bearing orchard, containing near 2000 apple trees, moſtly grafted.

Theſe excellent accommodations for extenſive and profitable manufactories, are offered to ſale at a very low rate, and on terms of payment calculated for the eaſe of the purchaſer, who may pay the greater part in the produce of the Iron Works, at a price to be agreed upon; and they are capable of producing more in one year, than will pay the whole price demanded.

For particulars, apply to WILLIAM RICHARDS, at the ſaid Works, JOHN COX, at Bloomſbury, near Trenton, or CHARLES PETTIT, in Philadelphia.

TO BE LET,

Enquire of the Printers.

A PROCLAMATION,

To prevent card-playing and other diversions, that prophane the Sabbath-day; as it was publiſhed in the ſecond year of the Protectorſhip of OLIVER CROMWELL.

WHEREAS a want of the due obſervance of religion has been the means of a number of the ſheep of our dearly beloved flock going aſtray, by which many unpardonable vices are introduced among our ſubjects.

We therefore publiſh and declare, and devoid of all hypocriſy, pronounce our utter abhorrence of every perſon who does not conform to the following rules and regulations—that is to ſay,

Firſt, That every maſter of a family, in health, if he be under the age of 70 years, and not leſs than 20, do riſe each, and every Sunday morning, at the hour of 6 o'clock, from the 25th of March to the 29th of September; and at 7 o'clock from the 29th of September to the 25th of March; and that he do cauſe all his family, except ſuch as are not in health, to attend prayers before breakfaſt, and antecedent to the hour of 9 o'clock; and that he do read, or cauſe to be read to them, the morning ſervice, as practiſed in the Church of England, to the end that they may be put in the true way of ſeeking the Lord, and that their ſouls may be ſaved from the claws of Beelzebub, the great He Devil, that ſeeketh continually whom he may devour.

Second, That as ſoon as breakfaſt is laid upon the table, he, the ſaid maſter, or in his abſence, ſome other perſon do ſay grace; and afterwards read the 9th Pſalm beginning confitebor tibi; and that during the time of breakfaſt, no immoral words be uttered, nor any preſent ſmile, or laugh or talk on any other ſubject, than the way of ſeeking the Lord; and that when breakfaſt is finiſhed, grace be again ſaid, and the 4th Pſalm read, beginning cum invocarem; after which each perſon ſhall retire to dreſs for church; from which holy place of edification, they are not to be abſent under any pretence whatever, but that of real indiſpoſition.

Third, That in order to edify the congregation as much as poſſible, there ſhall not be any bowing, ſmiling, whiſpering, ogling, or ſleeping, during the time of divine ſervice; but the eyes of each perſon preſent ſhall be fixed on the parſon and his clerk, on the holy communion table, or on the pulpit; and that on pain of our higheſt diſpleaſure, no perſon ſhall dare to look otherwiſe, than here ordered.

Fourth, That the parſon, curate, prieſt or deacon do read the ſervice in an audible tone of voice; and that he do wear a ſurplice and band, and a large buſhy grey wig; and that after ſervice, he do not accept any invitation to dinner from any of the pariſhioners; but that he quietly go home to his own repaſt, which muſt be cold, there to ſeek the Lord, and meditate on either Geneſis or the Revelations, until the time of evening ſervice arrives.

Fifth, And we furthermore ſtrictly command, that all manner of perſons whatſoever, do attend public worſhip twice on every Sunday, and that when evening ſervice is finiſhed, ſome one in each family do read at home to the reſt a chapter in the Bible, and that they who can read, do the ſame alternately, until there are as many chapters read as there are perſons in the room; and in order the more to enlighten the underſtanding of the auditors, we do ſeriouſly recommend for this heavenly amuſement, that part of Geneſis, which informs us, how all mankind ſprang from Adam, and thoſe other parts of the writings of Moſes, which tell us, miſerable wretches, how all the world but Noah, and thoſe with him in the Ark were drowned, the fiſhes in the ſea excepted: and we alſo recommend the ſtory of Lot, of Daniel in the Lion's den, of Shadrach, Meſhac and Abednego, of Jonas in the Whale's belly, and of beautiful Suſanna and the two wicked Elders, and of Nebuchadnezzer being turned out to graze with beaſts, and of Sampſon and the foxes; and we alſo deſire, that the elder branches of each family may explain to the juniors, in a clear maſterly manner, how the Blacks came into the world, Noah and his family being all white.

Sixth, And to the end that ſome little relaxation may be given, we allow the following amuſements from ſeven until ten at night, that is to ſay, 'laugh and lie down,' 'hot cockles,' 'hunt the ſlipper,' 'queſtions and commands,' 'hay this, what's that?' 'blind man's buff,' 'what's my thought like?' 'water my chickens,' 'bonny bunch of black berries,' 'hide and ſeek,' 'building houſes with cards,' 'riddles,' 'conondrums,' hymns, pſalm-ſinging, and ſacred muſic—after which, prayers muſt be read, and ſupper ſerved, and the night muſt finiſh with ſix chapters of the Revelations, the Athanaſian creed, and a gloria patri.

Theſe are our orders, and he who diſobeys them, ſhall feel our utmoſt diſpleaſure. Let therefore, every perſon who wiſhes to have our good-will, ſeek the Lord on a Sunday in the manner that we have here preſcribed unto him, her, or them.

AMERICA.

NASSAU, (N. P) October 13.

On the 8th of June laſt was ſold at Lloyd's coffee-houſe, the ſhip Thompſon, of 400 tons burthen, Philadelphia built, not four years old, for no more than 850l. This ſhip, before the American war, would have ſold for 3000l.—So much for the encouragement of ſhip-building in America."

A gentleman in the ſuite of the American ambaſſador at the court of London writes, by the July packet, to his friend in Jamaica, that his excellency, having lately applied to Mr. Pitt, to know "when the poſts on the frontiers of Canada were to be delivered up according to treaty," received for anſwer, "that it was the intention of his majeſty's miniſters to comply with the treaty in its fulleſt extent, whenever the courts of law in the United States were open to Britiſh creditors, and when Britiſh ſubjects were countenanced in their application to them for the recovery of their juſt debts."

HALIFAX, October 17.

Extract of a letter from a gentleman in London, to his friend in this town, dated Aug. 15.

"The wiſdom and ability of the preſent adminiſtration have ſo politically managed the channels of commerce and regulated the revenues, that, ſince laſt May, about 600 veſſels have cleared out every week from the port of London only, which with the entries inwards have produced near 900,000l. cuſtoms weekly. Such an aſtoniſhing increaſe and amount was never before known, and is the ſureſt criterion whereby to form an idea of the riſing opulence of this country. The oppoſition have rung their changes upon the neceſſity and certainty of a war on account of Holland, but the miniſtry ſeem determined to let them ſettle the diſpute among themſelves, more eſpecially as the diſtracted ſtate of French politics prevents that reſtleſs power from interfering. The ſpirit of liberty makes large advances in that country. Their parliament have determined to ſupport their authority and dignity, againſt and in ſpite of the king; they have reſolved, "that any one who acts under and in conſequence of a certain edict, which the king has publiſhed, as they ſay, in an aribitrary manner, ſhall be eſteemed a traitor, and be hanged upon the neareſt ſign-poſt.

"A moſt rich and beautiful ſword is making for the iſland of Barbadoes, who intend to preſent it to prince William Henry; the hilt is pure gold, enriched with many diamonds and pearls, and beautified with allegorical devices."

Oct 25. A correſpondent has deſired us to remark that the iniquitous prectice of importing Birmingham half pence and other baſe coin, into this country has been lately ſo barefacedly carried on, that it merits the attention of the legiſlature. It is therefore to be hoped that ſome public ſpirited Member will come forward the preſent ſeſſion, to ſuppreſs a ſpecies of traffick ſo injurious to the country in general, and the trade of the town of Halifax in particular.

NEW-LONDON, Sept. 26.

SIR,

WE have the honor to tranſmit to your excellency a printed copy of the conſtitution formed by the Fœderal Convention, to be laid before the legiſlature of the ſtate.

The general principles which governed the Convention in their deliberations on the ſubject are ſtated in their letter addreſſed to Congreſs.

We think it may be of uſe to make ſome further obſervations on particular parts of the conſtitution.

The Congreſs is differently organized, yet the whole number of members, and this ſtate's proportion of ſuffrage remain the ſame as before.

The equal repreſentation of the ſtates in the ſenate, and the voice of that branch in the appointment to offices, will ſecure the rights of the leſſer, as well as of the greater ſtates.

Some additional powers are veſted in Congreſs, which was a principal object that the ſtates had in view in appointing the convention; thoſe powers extend only to matters reſpecting the common intereſts of the union, and are ſpecially defined, ſo that the particular ſtates retain their ſovereignty in all other matters.

The objects for which Congreſs may apply monies are the ſame mentioned in the eighth article of the confederation, viz. for the common defence and general welfare, and for payment of the debts incurred for thoſe purpoſes. It is probable that the principal branch of revenue will be duties on imports;—what may be neceſſary to be raiſed by direct taxation is to be apportioned on the ſeveral ſtates, according to the numbers of their inhabitants and although Congreſs may raiſe the money by their own authority, if neceſſary, yet that authority need not be exerciſed if each ſtate will furniſh its quota.

The reſtraint on the legiſlatures of the ſeveral ſtates reſpecting emitting bills of credit, making any thing but money a tender in payment of debts, or impairing the obligation of contracts by ex poſt facto laws, was thought neceſſary as a ſecurity to commerce, in which the intereſt of foreigners as well as the citizens of different ſtates may be affected.

The Convention endeavoured to provide for the energy of government on the one hand, and ſuitable checks on the other hand, to ſecure the rights of the particular ſtates, and the liberties and properties of the citizens. We wiſh it may meet the approbation of the ſeveral ſtates, and be a mean of ſecuring their rights and lengthening out their tranquility.

With great reſpect, we are,
Sir, your Excellency's Obedient humble ſervants,
ROGER SHERMAN,
OLIVER ELSWORTH.

His Excellency Governor Huntington.

ANNAPOLIS, Nov. 1.

About ſix o'clock, on Tueſday morning laſt, the ſtadt-houſe was diſcovered to be on fire, occaſioned by the fire left in the chimney, which by ſome means communicated with the floor, and through that into the cellar to a quantity of ſhavings, but by timely and vigorous exertions it was happily extinguiſhed without much damage.

PETERSBURG, (Virginia) Nov. 1.

On Thurſday laſt, the Houſe of Delegates in this ſtate took under conſideration the reſolution of Congreſs, by which the appointment of a ſtate convention was recommended to the different legiſlatures in the union. The ſpeaker left his ſeat and placed Mr. Matthews in the chair.

Mr. Corbin opened the debate; and after having mentioned the critical ſituation of public affairs and the neceſſity of eſtabliſhing our union on a firm and unalterable baſis, ſpoke with approbation of the new plan of fœderal government. He cloſed an elegant and judicious ſpeech with propoſing ſeveral reſolutions, the principal of which was to this effect:—That a convention ſhould be called, according to the recommendation of Congreſs.

Mr. Henry roſe to oppoſe the reſolution as it then ſtood. He did not queſtion the propriety or neceſſity of calling a convention. No man, he ſaid, was more truly fœderal than himſelf. But he conceived that if this reſolution was adoped, the convention would only have it their power to ſay, that the new plan ſhould be adopted, or rejected; and that, however defective it might appear to them, they would not be authoriſed to propoſe amendments. The reſolution was, that a convention ſhould be called according to the recommendation of Congreſs. Congreſs had recommended that meaſure, according to the reſolution of the grand convention; which was merely that a convention might be called to give their aſſent and ratification. He therefore thought, that if the people acted under the reſolution propoſed by Mr. Corbin, the extent of which was only to be aſcertained by referring to the reſolution of the Fœderal Convention, the powers of the ſtate convention would not be ſufficient. It was poſſible that there might be ſome errors in the new government: Nay, he would not heſitate to declare, that there were errors and defects in it; and he therefore propoſed the addition of ſome words to Mr. Corbin's reſolution, by which the power of propoſing amendments might be given.

Mr. Corbin defended the reſolution which he had propoſed.

Mr. George Nicholas ſeconded his defence. He warmly reprobated Mr. Henry's amendment; becauſe, he ſaid, it would convey an idea to the people of this ſtate, and to the whole continent, that the legiſlature of Virginia thought that amendments might be made to the new government; whereas he believed the truth to be, that there was a decided majority in its favor. At the ſame time neither he nor Mr. Corbin denied the right of the convention to propoſe amendments.

Mr. Maſon, who had juſt taken his ſeat in the houſe, roſe to ſecond Mr. Henry's motion. He told the committee that he felt ſomewhat embarraſſed at the ſituation in which he then ſtood. He had been honored with a ſeat in the Fœderal Convention, and all knew that he had refuſed to ſubſcribe to their proceedings. This might excite ſome ſurpriſe; but it was not neceſſary at that hour, he ſaid, to make known his reaſons. At a proper ſeaſon they ſhould be communicated to his countrymen. He would however declare, that no man was more completely fœderal in his principles than he was: That from the eaſt of New-Hampſhire to the ſouth of Georgia, there was not a man more fully convinced of the neceſſity of eſtabliſhing ſome general government: That he regarded our perfect union as the rock of our political ſalvation: But, that he had conſidered the new fœderal government according to that meaſure of knowledge which God had given him—that he had endeavoured to make himſelf maſter of the important ſubject; that he had deeply and maturely weighed every article of the conſtitution; and with every information which he could derive, either from his own reflection, or the obſervations of others, he could not approve it. He ſaid, I thought it wrong, M. Chairman,—I thought it repugnant to our higheſt intereſts,—and if with theſe ſentiments I had ſubſcribed to it, I might have been juſtly regarded as a traitor to my country. I would have loſt this hand before it ſhould have marked my name to the new government.

Mr. Marſhall, with his uſual perſpicuity, ſtated the matter in controverſy. He thought Mr. Corbin's reſolution improper, for the reaſons ſtated by Mr. Henry. He thought Mr. Henry's amendment improper, for the reaſons urged by Mr. Nicholas.—He wiſhed, he ſaid, that the future convention ſhould have the fulleſt latitude in their deliberations—that they ſhould exerciſe the privilege which belonged to the free repreſentatives of a free country, of conſidering fully and in every point of view, the nature of the government under which we are to live: but he thought with Mr. Nicholas, that the people ſhould have no reaſon to ſuppoſe that their legiſlature diſapproved the new fœderal government; and therefore propoſed that the committee ſhould come to this reſolution:—That a convention ſhould be called, and that the new conſtitution ſhould be laid before them for their free and ample diſcuſſion.

The committee came into Mr. Marſhall's opinion; and a reſolution paſſed accordingly without oppoſition.

The ſpeakers were M. Corbin, Mr. Henry, Mr. Nicholas, Mr. Maſon, Mr. Prentis, Mr. Bland, Mr. Thruſton, Mr. Marſhall, and Mr. Benjamin Harriſon.

The elections for members to the convention are to take place (agreeable to the reſolution entered into by the houſe of delegates) in March, and they are to aſſemble at the capitol in the city of Richmond, in the month of May next.

We are informed, that in conſequence of the ſtrenuous endeavors of the gentlemen of the bar, employed in behalf of John Price Poſey, who was found guilty of burning the goal and clerk's office of New Kent, the judgment of the court is ſuſpended until the next ſeſſion.

RICHMOND, October 31.

On the 23d inſtant, the legiſlature re-elected EDMUND RANDOLPH, Eſquire, governor of this commonwealth for the enſuing year.

The ſame day, the following gentlemen were appointed to repreſent this ſtate in Congreſs for one year, viz. James Madiſon, jun. Edward Carrington, Henry Lee, Cyrus Griffin, and John Brown, Eſquires.

Extract of a letter from the Weſtern Country, dated October 10, 1787.

"Our vicinity to the friendly Cherokees, and the correſpondence we have contrived to eſtabliſh through the Indian country, even as far as the Choctaws, has been of great uſe to us particularly, and to other weſtern ſettlements.

"You, I underſtand, have been fully informed of the cauſe, and event of colonel Robinſon's expedition to the Muſcle Shoals, in the beginning of the laſt ſummer. This, and what happened in Georgia about the ſame time, now ſerves as a pretext to Mr. M'Gillivray to commence open hoſtilities. I ſay a pretext, becauſe it can be proven by ſufficient evidence, that the Creeks, under his expreſs orders, have for above two years paſt been annoying our out ſettlements, by ſmall parties, generally killing but few, but carrying off horſes in great numbers; theſe were ſold to his traders, at the Muſcle Shoals, and in the Creek country.—Colonel Robinſon's ſucceſs, and the death of a chief, was a ſufficient handle to rouſe the whole tribe to revenge. One party was ſuddenly detached to the Chickaſaws to murder Mr. Turnbull, Davenport, and their friends.—The former had the good fortune to obtain notice, and made his eſcape, with ſome others; but Davenport and his party being employed in beginning a ſettlement on the Miſſiſſippi, were overtaken and fell victims to ſavage fury.—About the ſame time, a formidable body, of between 6 and 700, moſtly Indians, ſet out in great parade, with drums, colours, muſic, and a number of horſemen equipped after the European manner. They were to have proceeded to the Cumberland ſettlements, and deſtroy man, woman and child without mercy; but happily, at the Tenaſee they were overtaken by an expreſs from the Creek chief, informing that a large army from Georgia was in full march towards their towns and adviſing them to return home and defend their wives and children. All but about one hundred inſtantly tacked about and ran homeward; the others proceeded until near the Cumberland ſettlement, but our people being a few days before, alarmed by our very friendly brothers the Chickaſaws, a detachment turning out from the garriſon at Naſhville, intimidated theſe bloodhounds, and they retreated out of the country with precipitation.

"A few days ago a friendly Cherokee from Chickamogga, bro't us word that 500 Creeks were encamped at the mouth of Hiwaſſee, and that it was uncertain whether their deſtination was to Cumberland, Kentucke, or up Holſtein and Clinch; our militia are aſſembling as faſt as they can, to go and meet them; and I hope to ſee ſuch a force aſſembled in a few days as may enable us with confidence to look the enemy in the face."

Nov. 1. On Sunday laſt, the ſheriff of Waſhington, brought down to the public gaol in this city, John Summers and James M'Connell Fox, the firſt for ſtealing a horſe, the property of a Mr. Montgomery; the laſt for the murder of a ſon of a Mr. Ruſſel, who was returning home from a mill in the neighbourhood where he had been ſent on ſome buſineſs by his father. The priſoner met the youth, and with one blow of a club knocked him off his horſe, then taking his penknife out of his pocket, cut his throat from ear to ear, mounted his horſe, and rode off with him. He was taken with the horſe in his poſſeſſion. On his way down he made two attempts to murder the ſheriff. The unhappy wretch is about 22 years of age, a native of Pennſylvania, and about four years ago came into Greenbrier county, where he married a young woman of a tolerable eaſy fortune, which he made away with in a few months.

Philadelphia, Nov. 10.

Yeſterday arrived here the ſhip Amſterdam Packet, captain Collet, after a ſhort paſſage from Amſterdam. By this veſſel we have the following important Intelligence:

Extract of a letter from Amſterdam, Sept 17, 1787.

"I had a great deal to write to you; but at preſent every thing here is in the utmoſt ferment and confuſion, on account of 30,000 Pruſſian troops having entered Gueldria, and being in full march towards Holland; which will be a capital ſtroke againſt us. This news has thrown us into the greateſt conſternation, and in particular has caſt ſuch a damp on my mind, that I am entirely unfit for any buſineſs. We are indeed aſſured of France's aſſiſtance, and it is ſaid the French troops at Givet are actually under marching orders for our province; but this will take up ſome days, and in the mean while the Pruſſians may do a great deal of miſchief. Utrecht has been evacuated by our people, becauſe the garriſon, conſiſting of between 7 and 8000 men, could be better employed in defending the province of Holland than the town of Utrecht, which after all could not have held out a ſiege.

"Thus far I had written this morning—and this afternoon, my dear ——, all the gates are ſhut, the bridges drawn up, and all communication ſtopt between the city and country.—This is, indeed, a melancholy ſight.

"The various reports arriving here every minute are often of ſo contradictory a nature, that they only ſerve to encreaſe our perplexity. This afternoon it was aſſerted, the Pruſſian troops were already in the province of Holland, even as near as Weeſp, which is but two miles from us. This probably has been the occaſion of ſhutting the gates. In ſhort, every thing wears a wretched aſpect, and I am of opinion that our patriotic party is undone——and then—farewel, dear Holland, for ever.

"This moment we hear that Naarden and Weeſp are already taken, which is but at a few hours diſtance between us and the enemy, ſo that by to-morrow they may with the greateſt eaſe be before our gates. It is not difficult to foreſee that they will be admitted, as no reſiſtance can be made. Fatal conſequences of quarreling for years, without putting themſelves in a ſtate of defence. O heavens! what dreadful diſpenſation is this!

"Good night, dear ——; I could burſt out a crying when I think of it. God knows whether we ſhall not be totally plundered, for the mob will be outrageous againſt the patriots."

Extracts from the JOURNAL of CONGRESS,
New-York, Monday, Oct. 22, 1787.

On the report of a committee, conſiſting of Mr. Carrington, Mr. King, Mr. Dane, Mr. Madiſon and Mr. Cook, to whom was referred a letter of the ſecretary at war, of the 26th of April laſt;

Reſolved, That a million of acres of land, to be bounded eaſt by the ſeventh range of townſhips, ſouth by the land contracted for by Cutler and Sargent, and to extend north as far as the ranges of townſhips, and weſtward ſo far as to include the above quantity; alſo, a tract to be bounded as follows, beginning at the mouth of the river Ohio, thence up the Miſſiſſippi to the river Au Vauſe; thence up the ſame until it meets a weſt line from the mouth of the Little Wabaſh; thence eaſterly with the ſaid weſt line to the Great Wabaſh; thence down the ſame to the Ohio, and thence with the Ohio to the place of beginning, be reſerved and ſet apart for the purpoſe of ſatisfying the military boundary due to the late army, and that no locations, other than for the ſaid bounties, be permitted within the ſaid tract, until they ſhall be fully ſatisfied.

That the ſecretary at war take meaſures for aſcertaining the exiſting claims for ſuch bounties, and that the geographer proceed to have the ſame ſurveyed, under the direction of the ſecretary at war, agreeably to the terms upon which they have been promiſed.

On motion of Mr. H. Lee, ſeconded by Mr. Irwine,

Reſolved, That the governor of the weſtern territory be, and he is hereby empowered to hold a general treaty with the adjacent Indian tribes in the enſuing ſpring, if in his judgment the public good requires it; and that he be authoriſed to draw for ſuch ſums of the money appropriated by the reſolve of Congreſs of the 12th inſt. as may be neceſſary to effect this object, not exceeding in the whole the ſum of fourteen thouſand dollars.

We hear from Clinch, in Virginia, that a number of ſettlers belonging to that place, who were out gathering ginſang, diſcovered 800 or more Indians, marching towards French-Broad, on their way to the frontiers of that ſettlement—That the inhabitants were in continual alarm—That orders in conſequence have been iſſued for the militia to hold themſelves in readineſs to turn out on the ſhorteſt notice—That there was no account of any damage being done by them when the account came away—and that the report, ſome time paſt, of 40 families being cut off in the lower ſettlements, was without foundation; four men only were killed, and a few wounded.

For the CITY of PHILADELPHIA.

Thomas M'Kean, James Wilſon, Benjamin Ruſh, George Latimer, and Hilary Baker, eſquires.

For PHILADELPHIA COUNTY.

George Gray, John Hunn, William Macpherſon, Enoch Edwards and Samuel Aſhmead, eſquires.

For CHESTER COUNTY.

For BERKS COUNTY.

Joſeph Heiſter, John Biſhop, John Ludwick, Nicholas Lutz, and Abraham Lincoln, eſquires.

Philip Kreemer, eſquire, is elected a member of the General Aſſembly for Berks county, in the room of Charles Biddle, eſquire, reſigned.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY.

Tueſday, October 30, 1787. A. M.

The return from the county of Northumberland was received, and laid before the houſe, from which it appeared, that Samuel Maclay and John White, Eſquires, were returned as repreſentatives to the general aſſembly for the enſuing year.

Mr. M'Lene preſented a petition, ſigned by 48 claimants of lands, under Pennſylvania titles, within the county of Luzerne, ſetting forth, that they have ſeen, with a great degree of ſatisfaction, ſundry reſolutions, recommended by the late houſe of aſſembly to the attention of the preſent, and which, if carried into effect, with the few amendments they crave leave to point out, will, they sincerely hope, be the means of giving general satisfaction.

The first resolution they pray may be amended, by enabling the commissioners, in case of disagreement, to choose an umpire.

The second to make the certificates receivable in the land office for all payments.

The third, they wish no alteration in, but pray the first instalment may be within the year, as many of them are really distressed by their losses at Wyoming.

Ordered to lie on the table.

Saturday, November 3.

The house met pursuant to adjournment.

Several petitions of a private nature were presented and ordered to lie on the table.

The committee on the petitions, complaining of the irregularity of the election for Dauphin county reported, that they had examined into the allegations, but not finding any proofs to support them, they recommended the following resolution, that the petitions be dismissed for want of evidence. The report being afterwards read a second time, the resolution was unanimously adopted.

The bill for raising the quota of troops of this state agreeably to the requisition of Congress, was read a second time, and ordered to be printed for public consideration.

The committee on the present state of affairs in the county of Luzerne, made a further report, in which it was recommended that a committee be appointed to bring in a bill for exacting a test of allegiance from the inhabitants of that county, and to enforce them to subscribe a declaration, acknowledging the jurisdiction of the state of Pennsylvania therein, promising to assist and support the public officers in the execution of the laws, &c. &c. The report was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. Logan. Sir, I beg leave to call the attention of the house to the penal law, which was passed in a former assembly for the benevolent purpose of rendering punishments less sanguinary. It is well known that this act was merely intended as an experiment, and as there has been a sufficient opportunity for judging of its utility, it becomes the legislature to enquire whether it has succeeded, or may not, at least, require some alterations and amendments. For this purpose I submit to the house the following resolution: 'that a committee be appointed to consider and revise the law passed for amending the penal laws of this commonwealth, to enquire and report how far the same has answered the benevolent intention of the legislature, and if they see fit to report a bill for altering or repealing the same.'

Mr George Clymer. I have no objection, Mr. Speaker, to the investigation which the motion proposes, but I conceive in a matter of so much importance, it would be proceeding too hastily, to authorise the committee, upon their partial opinions and information, to report a bill in the first instance. I therefore propose that that part of the motion be struck out.

Mr. M'Lene. It is readily admitted that the law intended to be affected by this motion, was a matter of experiment; but I conceive that as such, it would be proper to wait for some representation from the people, or the courts, before we enquire into the event. Many escapes have indeed taken place, and some complaints have been made against the operation of this penal system; but were those counties who are not provided with places of security within their own jurisdictions, to take advantage of the clause which authorizes them to remove their convicts into this, or any neighbouring county, where strong gaols are erected, the former grievance would be effectually cured; and the complaints against the law itself being always accompanied with the odious alternative of hanging, I am persuaded the house is not prepared to listen to them upon such terms. A live man is better than a dead one; and if we can secure the felons and rogues of society, so as to prevent them from doing any injury, while we employ them so as to render them serviceable to the community, every purpose of punishment will be accomplished without violating the principles of humanity. Considering this motion therefore as having a very important tendency, the same wish to give it a full consideration, which induces me to vote for the rejection of the concluding words, will induce me, after that is done, to move for a postponement of the business.

Mr. Peters. I did not intend to have troubled the house upon this question, but as the observations of the gentleman who spoke last are pointed against the commitment, I think it proper to declare my opinion of the expediency of the measure. Sir, there can be no doubt of the dissatisfaction which this act has excited among the people. At first, indeed, it carried some terror to the minds of those who were the objects of its penalties, but after a short time, they learned to ridicule and despise it. The consequence has been a notorious increase of rogues and vagabonds throughout the state: and in the neighbourhood of my residence, so alarming has been their growing numbers and audacity since the introduction of the new penal system, that we have been obliged to maintain a kind of garrison against their depredations. I am, Mr. Speaker, as great an enemy to sanguinary punishments as any man, but it is the duty of government to take effectual measures for protecting its honest and peaceable citizens from the profligate and wicked. The present law, experience proves to be inadequate to that purpose, and though I do not think it necessary to adopt the alternative of hanging, I am convinced that it is immediately necessary to devise such amendments and modifications, as will afford a more efficient security for our persons and property. To do this with the deliberation which the importance of the subject demands, I shall concur in striking out the words authorising the committee to report a bill, but I shall oppose every idea of postponement.

Mr. Lollar and Mr. Kennedy approved the alteration proposed, which was accordingly adopted; and Mr. M'Lene's motion for a postponement not being seconded, a committee, consisting of five members, was appointed agreeably to the original motion.

The Speaker informed the house that there was no business on their files, whereupon Mr. Lowry moved for an adjournment 'till three o'clock on Wednesday afternoon, to which time the house accordingly adjourned.

Mess. Dunlap & Claypoole,

BY inserting the following interesting, as well as intelligent Narrative in your useful paper, you will oblige the public at large, especially those who are engaged in agriculture.

A FEW months since I read an advertisement in one of the public papers of Philadelphia, complaining of that pernicious insect commonly known by the appellation of the Hessian Bug, as being generally destructive to the wheat in that state—I beg leave to inform you, that my neighbours and I sustained great loss by that reptile; so great, indeed, that we despond-ed of ever raising any. In the year 1785, I fortunately purchased one bushel of wheat of a certain quality, which produced more abundantly than any which I have seen for many years, and proved an antidote to the above-described insect these two years last past.

Any person or persons who should be desirous of purchasing any quantity of said wheat (not exceeding one hundred bushels) may be supplied with the same, at 14s. per bushel, by applying to Mr. Peter Walsh, instructor of youth, No. 24, Duke-street, New-York.

From the Newport Herald.

Mr. Edes,

IF you think the following lines merit a place in your paper, you will please to publish them—In so doing, you'll oblige your friend and well-wisher,

SYLVIA.

I AM a young maiden, and no married wife,
I lead and enjoy a sweet country life:
I live on a plain, by the side of a grove,
Where sometimes I muse on the subject of love.
A clear crystal riv'let runs by my hut—
Good Mr. Printer, don't think me a slut;
For I scrub up my cottage, and make it look neat,
And keep my apartments salubrious and sweet:
For 'tis a sage maxim, in our rural life,
That a tidy young virgin will make a neat wife.
My principal pleasure is writing and reading;
But alas! Mr. Printer, I lack in good breeding;
I'm situate here in a sequester'd station,
Which never afforded polite education.
I'm glad that you're come to Newport's grand town,
(The city, I hear, is lately took down)
I hope that you'll teach us the art of good breeding,
For you print a paper that's well worth a reading.
We've had such a paper these seven years past,
As greatly disgusted our rude rustic taste:
But since that the Herald has come on the stage,
'Tis read and admir'd by simple and sage;
'Tis almost ador'd by the nymphs and the swains,
Who live on the adjacent hamlets and plains.
Dear Mr. Printer, I shall love you for ever,
For mixing delight and improvement together.—
That you may proceed and act well in your station,
And prove a rich blessing to this rising nation,
Is the fervent desire of a rural young miss,
Who (if you can find her) will grant you a kiss.

ANECDOTE.

THE following instance of the Influence of a good and great man will, we presume, be acceptable to every reader who loves his country, and venerates its darling Hero.—In the late Federal Convention, it had been for a long time debated, what should be the ratio of representation, and it was carried by a considerable majority, to make it one for every forty thousand inhabitants. In this form the matter was sent to the press; but when the subject came for the last time under the consideration of the Convention, and was about to be confirmed by an almost unanimous vote, General Washington rose, and spoke to the following effect: "Though I am sensible of the impropriety of your chairman's intermingling in your debates, yet I cannot help observing, that the small number which constitutes the representative body appears to be a defect in your plan. It would better suit my ideas, and I believe it will be more grateful to the wishes of the people, if that number was encreased." The question was immediately put, without a debate, upon a motion that the ratio be one for thirty thousand, (as it now stands), and it was unanimously carried. Such was the magic force of this patriot's opinion! and it adds to the lustre of his virtues, that this critical interference (which we are well assured was all the share he had in the business of the late Convention) tended to promote the interest and dignity of the people.

Foreign Intelligence.

AMSTERDAM, August 30.

OUR small vessels continue to cruise in the Zuider-Zee, on the coasts of Overyssel, in order to prevent any importations at Amersfort. The Sieur Delatre, of Dunkirk, is appointed to the command of one of these vessels, carrying 10 four-pounders and 20 men.

HAGUE, August 29.

In consequence of a demand from the armed corps of Delft, the counsellors deputies have granted them permission to take out of the magazine of the generalty, some pieces of cannon. This demand was made by a letter from the magistracy of Delft.

The states of Amersfort have informed the French ambassador, that they are ready to accept the mediation of France, jointly with the Emperor, England, and Prussia, provided as a preliminary, that they are acknowledged as the only true states of the province of Utrecht!

UTRECHT, August 29.

We are assured that the Rhingrave of Salm has not advised the commission of their noble and great powers to withdraw the troops of Holland from this garrison; and that this brave general, commander in chief of all the troops destined and employed in its defence, fears not to make head against any army, whatever it may be, that shall lay siege to this city. We are very certain that the little Prussian army will not undertake such an enterprize, we cannot persuade ourselves that the members of the equestrian order of the province of Holland could represent to the states, as serious news, the fabricated lie of an anonymous letter; there never was an example of such credulity, so that this alarm must have proceeded from another cause.

We have been this day made acquainted with the motive which led the prince of Orange to quit Amersfort so suddenly: His highness having absolutely meditated an attack on Utrecht, he insisted on the pitiful state of Amersfort giving their consent; but they, better informed than their general of the danger of such an attack with so few forces, in the state we are at present, opposed to enterprize. They maintained, that one of the most considerable cities of the republic, and the capital of their province, ought not to be exposed to a ruin so deplorable, and that by a national army; these sentiments of humanity were strongly enforced by that of their personal interest, and by the fear of exposing their families to the most dreadful though just reprisals. The advice of the states of Amersfort was, that the prince should force his passage into Holland, and carry into execution, through that hostile province, the ravages he had meditated against Utrecht. The Prince, struck with horror in his turn, and consulting also his personal interest, and that of his house, constantly refused to engage in an enterprize more perilous still, and which would in the end be attended with consequences infinitely more disagreeable to him. Thus the two parties would neither cede to the one nor the other, and his highness departed after testifying the most expressive discontent. It is to be wished that these two parties would never re-unite again, but think seriously on both sides of adopting principles more wise, and more conformable to the general welfare of the republic. The prince is returned to Amersfort.

LEIPSICK, August 6.

A storm accompanied with hail, the stones being of an extraordinary size, has devastated the whole country between Fridlande, in Bohemia, and Bunzlau, in Silesia.

LONDON, Sept. 4.

The Prussian troops are all in motion, and the reigning duke at Brunswick, who commands them, continues at Wezel. That prince has sent lieutenant d'Ammon with dispatches, to be delivered only to the king himself, at Silesia. The baron de Heynitz, minister of state, of war, and of Finances, has been at Cleves since the 22d of August, and couriers are incessantly passing to and from the Prussian envoy at the Hague.

We are assured from a correspondent at the Hague, that M. de Thulemeyer is expected every day to deliver a third memorial, on the answer to which, the march of the Prussian army into Holland, will depend. Every thing will be ready for that event by the middle of the month.

So great are the domestic troubles in France, that we are assured the king will neither go to Fontainbleau nor Compiegne this year. His majesty labors under great and painful inquietudes, and appears very much depressed in his spirits.

As the marquis of Landsdown claimed all the glory of the late peace, it must naturally be supposed he will not give up the smallest particle of the honor due from France, having it already in his power to hazard by her intrigues the drawing this distressed kingdom into a war!

Had the conclusion of the late war, and the formation of the articles of peace been left to lord North, which every well-wisher to Great Britain most ardently desired, we should not at this time been in danger of a new war—one campaign more would have compelled our combined enemies to have yielded to an honorable peace, and put it out of the power of France, in so short a period, to have again disturbed the harmony of Europe.

A letter from Dover says, that several French families have within a week landed there from France, and intend to settle in Canterbury: they give a shocking account of the want of provisions in all parts of France; and that affairs there are in such an alarming situation, that they thought it most prudent to quit a country where their persons and property are not safe.

The directors of the India company have presented the society for promoting Christian Knowledge with 100 reams of superfine paper, for the purpose of enabling the society to complete a version of the Bible in the Malabar language, for the use of the natives in India.

AMERICA.

KEENE, (New-Hampshire) Sept. 25.

The following are the particulars of the unhappy catastrophe which happened at Bennington, as mentioned in our last, the particulars are related by the distressed parents (who were absent when the accident happened). That the pistol had been loaded extremely heavy a few evenings before, by a young man of the family, with intent to shoot an owl; that he laid the pistol upon a shelf near the chamber floor, but the little boy finding where the pistol was laid, and having been frequently indulged in snapping and playing with it, found means by setting a chair against the wall and climbing up the back of it, to get the pistol down unknown to the family, and went out to play with it as usual. At the time the girl was killed she was sitting in a sleigh box before the door, holding an infant in her arms, the whole charge of the pistol lodged in her body just above her left breast, which put an immediate period to her existence. It is supposed the boy must have been very near her when the pistol went off, as there were nearly forty shot holes in a space but a little bigger than the circumference of a dollar.

BOSTON, October 27.

Commonwealth of Massachusetts.

In SENATE, October 20, 1787.

WHEREAS the Convention lately assembled at Philadelphia, have reported to Congress a constitution for the United States of America, in which convention were represented the states of New Hampshire, Massachusetts, Connecticut, N. York, New-Jersey, Pennsylvania, Delaware, Maryland, Virginia, North-Carolina, South-Carolina, and Georgia; which constitution was unanimously approved of by the said states in convention assembled: And whereas that convention resolved, that the said constitution should be laid before the United States in Congress assembled, and that it was their opinion that it should be submitted to a convention of delegates chosen in each state by the people thereof, under the recommendation of its legislature, for their assent and ratification; and that each convention assenting to and ratifying the same, should give notice thereof to the United States in Congress assembled.

And whereas the United States in Congress assembled, by their resolution of the 28th of September last, unanimously resolved, "That the constitution so reported, be transmitted to the several legislatures, in order to be submitted to a convention of delegates chosen in each state by the people thereof, in conformity to the resolves of the said convention, in that case made and provided." And whereas the said constitution has been transmitted to the legislature of this commonwealth accordingly:

It is therefore Resolved, That it be, and it is hereby recommended to the people of this commonwealth, that a convention of delegates be chosen agreeably to, and for the purposes mentioned in the resolution of Congress aforesaid, to meet at the state house in Boston, on the second Wednesday of January next, and that the constitution so reported be submitted to the said convention, for their assent and ratification; and that the said convention assenting to and ratifying the same, give notice thereof to the United States in Congress assembled, in conformity to the resolves of the said convention in that case made and provided.

And it is further Resolved, That the selectmen of the several towns and districts within this commonwealth, be, and they are hereby directed, to convene as soon as may be, the inhabitants of their several towns and districts, qualified by law to vote in the election of representatives, for the purpose of chusing delegates to represent them in said convention.

And to preserve an equality to the people in their representation in the said convention, that the several towns and districts elect respectively, by ballot, not exceeding the same number of delegates as by law they are entitled to send representatives to the general court.

And it is further Resolved, That the secretary immediately procure to be printed a sufficient number of copies of these resolutions, as also of the said constitution, with the resolutions of the convention, and their letter to the president of Congress, accompanying the same; and also of the resolution of the United States in Congress, thereupon; and that he transmit three copies of the same, as soon as may be, by expresses, to the sheriffs of the several counties within this commonwealth, with positive directions to be by them, or their deputies, without delay, personally delivered to the selectmen of each town and district within their respective counties.

And it is further Resolved, That the selectmen or the major part of the selectmen of each town or district, shall certify the election of such person or persons as may be appointed by their respective towns or districts as a delegate or delegates to the convention aforesaid.

And it is further Resolved, That the several delegates of the said convention, be allowed for their travel and attendance, out of the public treasury, the same pay as will be allowed the representatives therefor this present session, and that the same be defrayed at the public expence.

And it is further Resolved, That his excellency the governor be, and he is hereby requested, with advice of council, to issue his warrant upon the treasurer, directing him to discharge the pay-roll of the said convention, out of any monies which will then be in the treasury, not appropriated.

And it is further Resolved, That if there shall not be sufficient monies then in the treasury for that purpose, the treasurer is hereby authorized and directed to borrow sufficient monies therefor, on such funds of the government as are not appropriated.

JOHN AVERY, jun. Secretary.

Commonwealth of Massachusetts.

By his Excellency JOHN HANCOCK, Esq. Governor of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts.

A PROCLAMATION,

For a Day of Public Thanksgiving.

THE mercies which we are constantly receiving at the hands of Almighty God, ought ever to remind us of our dependence upon, and obligations to him; and as the business of the year is now drawing towards a conclusion, it becomes our special duty, according to the laudable usuage of this commonwealth, in a public and social manner, gratefully to acknowledge the manifold bounties of Divine Providence, conferred upon us in the course thereof.

I have therefore thought fit, by and with the advice of council, to appoint, and do hereby appoint Thursday, the twenty-ninth day of November next, to be set apart, and observed as a day of public thanksgiving,—that all the people of this commonwealth, may at one time, and with one voice, devoutly express their gratitude to our great benefactor, for his innumerable benefits; particularly that in the course of the year past, he hath been pleased to favor the people with an uncommon measure of health; to restore peace and tranquility to this commonwealth in so great a degree, to order the seasons so favourably, that the labour of the husbandman has been crowned with an abundance of the produce of the earth; to increase our fisheries and enlarge our manufactures and commerce, and graciously to direct and succeed the administrations of government, and above all, that he has mercifully continued to us the light of the blessed Gospel, together with the full enjoyment of our invaluable privileges, religious and civil.

And I do hereby exhort all ministers of the gospel, within this commonwealth, with their several congregations, to assemble on that day, in their several places of religious worship; and in a solemn and public manner, to render thanks to Almighty God, for these and all other of his mercies:—And I further recommend to ministers and people, to accompany their thanksgivings with devout and fervent prayers to the Great Governor of the world—that, notwithstanding our ingratitude, and manifold transgressions, he would continue his gracious providence over us—that he would prosper our public councils—and particularly, that at this important crisis of our public affairs, he would give all needed wisdom to the delegates, that may be appointed to take under consideration the proceedings of the late Continental Convention—and that the result of their deliberations, may be the happy establishment of such a government, as may be adapted to the common safety and happiness—and finally, that peace and concord, truth and justice, benevolence and undefiled religion, may universally prevail.

And it is earnestly recommended, that the said day be religiously observed, and that all unnecessary labour be suspended thereon.

Given at the Council-Chamber, in Boston, the 25th day of October, in the year of our Lord, 1787, and in the twelfth year of the Independence of the United States of America.

JOHN HANCOCK.

By his Excellency's Command,
With the Advice and Consent of Council,

JOHN AVERY, Jun. Sec.

GOD SAVE THE COMMONWEALTH.

By a gentleman last Sunday from the Susquehanna settlement, we are informed, that Mr. Street, merchant from Farmington, was lately murdered on his way from Niagara, and robbed of about five hundred pounds, the avails of neat cattle he had taken into that settlement.

October 30. Yesterday, in the house of representatives, a petition from some gentlemen for establishing a brewery in some part of this commonwealth, was read and committed.———Speaking of the advantages which would derive to the community from such an establishment, a gentleman observed, that the adoption of such a measure would probably be instrumental in the preservation of many lives, as the pernicious use of New-England rum would not then be so excessive.

NEWPORT, October 25.

America, destined by nature to be carriers of her own produce yet tamely suffers this valuable branch of trade to be monopolized by foreigners—In the harbour of New-York there are now sixty ships, of which fifty-five are British. The produce of South Carolina was shipped in 170 ships, of which 150 were British: the other southern states freight their produce in the same proportion. In addition to the loss of being carriers of our own produce, we suffer greatly by the free importation of the gewgaws of Europe and many articles of produce. Our cheese and barley which formerly realized a handsome income to the farmer, are now hawked about at an under price for a market. Surely there is not an American who regards the interest of his country but must see the immediate necessity of an efficient federal government; without it the northern states will soon be depopulated and dwindle into poverty, while the southern ones will become silk worms to toil and labour for Europe.

Heaven (says a correspondent) seems preparing America for greatness and importance, by gradations that no nation in the world were ever blessed with. When our rights were infringed by an ungrateful mother, it diffused a spirit of liberty and virtue. When foreign mercenaries aided by a parent's sword threatned havock and desolation, numerous armies, from hidden sources, were brought into existence and led on to victory and success. When the avarice of foreign powers thwarted the natural system of commerce, and internal corruptions enervated the principles of government, and brought us to the alarming crisis of pusillanimously expecting some bold usurper to assume the reigns and sport with the invaluable rights of men, the goodness of our God was truly apparent in having influenced the people to constitute a convention to remedy those disorders, and in leading them on to organize a government upon the lasting basis of liberty and order. This is the seed time of union—the state that should be now unfederal will plunge herself into merited disgrace, if not annihilation.

NEW-YORK, Nov. 7.

The king of Prussia and the stadtholder will consider well of the matter, before they form the siege of Utrecht, Mæstricht, or any other great city; the expence of a siege is great almost beyond conception: some idea may be formed of it from the following authentic account of some of the charges that attended the siege of Turin. The marechal de Marsan and the duke of Orleans, who commanded the army of the besiegers, took with them for the purpose of battering the capital of Piedmont, 140 pieces of cannon, each of which, when mounted, and exclusive of the expence incurred for transporting them, stood the king in about 300l. sterl. One hundred and ten thousand balls for the cannon; 110,000 cartridges of powder to fire them off; 300,000 musquet cartridges with ball; 21,000 bomb shells; 27,000 hand grenades; 15,000 sand bags; 30,000 instruments or tools for the miners and pioneers; 1,200,000 pounds of powder for the mortars, grenades, springing of mines, &c. To these articles must be added of lead, iron, tin, &c. immense quantities; and upon summing up the whole, it will appear that as much money was expended in an attempt to destroy one single city in Italy, as would have been sufficient to found a numerous colony, and put it in a most flourishing condition. But what was worse, after all this enormous expence, Turin was not taken; for the French were attacked in their trenches by the duke of Savoy, who, flying to the relief his capital, slew above 10,000 of the besiegers, put the remainder to flight, and of course raised the siege.

CHARLESTON, Oct. 8.

It is said the Indians have sent their old men, women and children to the Spanish side; and are collecting in great force.

In the HOUSE OF DELEGATES OF VIRGINIA.

Thursday, October 25, 1787.

Resolved unanimously, That the proceedings of the fœderal convention, as transmitted to the general assembly, through the medium of Congress, be submitted to a convention of the people, for their full and free investigation and discussion.

Resolved, That every citizen, being a freeholder in this commonwealth, be eligible to a seat in the convention, and that the people therefore be not restrained in their choice of delegates by any of those legal or constitutional restrictions, which confine them in their choice of members to the legislature.

Resolved, That it be recommended to each county to elect two delegates, and to each city, town, or corporation entitled, or who may be entitled by law, to representation in the legislature, to elect one delegate to said convention.

Resolved, That the qualifications of electors be the same as those established by law.

Resolved, That the elections for delegates as aforesaid, be held at the usual places appointed by law for holding the elections for delegates to the general assembly, and that the same be conducted by the officers, who conduct the elections of delegates, and conformably to the rules and regulations thereof.

Resolved, That the elections of delegates be held in the month of March next, on the first day of the court to be held for each county, city, or corporation respectively; and that the persons so chosen, assemble in the state house, in the city of Richmond, on the fourth Monday in May.

Resolved, That two thousand copies of these resolutions be forthwith printed and distributed by the members of the general assembly, among their constituents, and that the executive transmit a copy of them to Congress, and to the legislature and executive of the respective states.

Test. JOHN BECKLEY, Clk. H. D.

ELIZABETH-TOWN, November 7.

When the illustrious Washington was called on by the Convention to ratify the Constitution as its President—holding the pen, after a short pause, he pronounced these words, too remarkable to be forgotten or unknown—"Should the States reject this excellent Constitution, the probability is, an opportunity will never again offer to cancel another in peace—the next will be drawn in blood!"—Great Heaven, avert the direful catastrophe! But may the rising glories of his country gild his declining horizon, and her smiling prosperity cheer his heart at sinking into the embrace of death!

At a joint meeting of the legislature on Wednesday last, his excellency William Livingston, esq; was re-appointed governor of this state for the ensuing year; and Abraham Clark, Jonathan Elmer, and William Patterson, esqrs. members of Congress.

The last accounts from London advise, that four consuls were, it was said, to be appointed for the management of the British mercantile concerns in the United States of America.

Philadelphia, Nov. 12.

The appointment of delegates to Congress is postponed till to-morrow.

On Wednesday last the Supreme Executive Council proceeded to the election of a Secretary, when there appeared nine votes in favor of Joseph Redman, Esq; and ten in favor of Charles Biddle, Esq; who was accordingly re-elected to that office.

On Friday last, in the General Assembly, the bill for settling the allowance of the delegates to the ensuing convention being taken up for a third reading, Mr. M'Lean moved for an amendment, by which it was provided, that a quorum of the delegates, in order to proceed to business, should consist of the same number as the constitution prescribes for a quorum of the General Assembly: whereupon a considerable debate arose, in which the advocates for the amendment insisted, that the house was as competent to adopt it, in order to remove any suspicion or jealousy which might otherwise arise, that a few of the neighbouring counties would assemble and transact the business to their own minds, before the remote counties could send forward their delegates. The members opposed to the amendment urged, that the resolutions of the house were merely recommendatory, but that its laws were held to be obligatory; as therefore the house could not impose any rules or regulations upon the convention, which will sit under the paramount authority of the people, and not of the legislature, it would be improper to do what must be in its nature nugatory and absurd; or in other words, to enact a law which would not be binding in its operation. The amendment was lost by a considerable majority.

A petition from the manufacturing society represented to the assembly, that several models had been bought up to be sent abroad, and several artists seduced to quit the state, and praying that a law might be passed to prevent such pernicious practices, in conformity to the example of every manufacturing nation in Europe. Mr. Fitzsimons enforced the prayer of the petition, by informing the house, that two models for the cotton manufactory had been purchased by certain persons in this city, and sent abroad, and that there was reason to assert, that a subscription had been entered into for the accomplishment of such purchases, and for defraying the charge of removing artists and manufacturers from the country. The petition was read a second time by special order, and referred to a committee. Could we discover the names of the persons alluded to in the above petition, we should think it our duty to lay them before the public.

On the question respecting the petition of Messrs. Wells and Clifford, for relinquishing the public share of the forfeiture accruing from the condemnation of the ship Anna, a considerable argument arose, in which the technical abilities of the gentlemen of the law, members of assembly, were exerted, to establish a distinction between fine and forfeiture, and to prove that council might, under the constitution, remit the former, but could not relinquish the latter. From these premises they deduced the necessity of calling in the legislative aid to relieve the hardship which the petitioners would otherwise be exposed to; and the opinion of the house being taken on two several propositions, viz first, whether Messrs. Wells and Clifford should be relieved, and second, whether the Executive Council should be vested, for the future, with the power of relinquishing forfeitures in maritime cases, the numbers were equally divided, and the vote of the speaker decided both questions in the affirmative, and a committee was appointed to bring in a bill accordingly.

We are happy to inform our readers, that in consequence of the report of the committee on that part of the message from council which relates to the paper-money, a committee was on Friday last appointed by the General Assembly, to bring in a bill enabling mortgagers to pay off their respective loans before the time stipulated for payment thereof, and repealing that part of the law for erecting a loan-office, which authorizes the commissioners to re-loan any sums that may be paid off upon prior mortgages. By these regulations, the committee who made the report have calculated, that the whole of the late emission will be redeemed in the space of three years. The beneficial effect which the proceedings of the legislature upon this subject have already produced, open a flattering prospect that the paper will soon be restored to its merited credit, much to the ease and comfort of a numerous class of poor and industrious citizens.

We hear from Dover, that the county of Sussex continues unrepresented in the house of Assembly, which has induced them to pass a law making eleven members a quorum for doing business. They have also, it is said, directed the votes of all qualified persons to be admitted at the approaching election for a convention, without distinction whether they have complied with the test law or not.

Congress resolved, on the 12th ult. That such of the aged and infirm of the Canadian refugees on the Lake Champlain, as may not be able to provide for the subsistence of themselves and families, be supplied for the space of twelve months with rations, at the public expence (excepting the articles of rum, soap, and candles) agreeably to such a return of persons coming under the above description, as shall be made to the board of treasury by the secretary at war.

Extracts from the JOURNAL of CONGRESS.

TUESDAY, October 16, 1787.

On motion of Mr. Carrington,

Resolved unanimously, That a medal of gold be struck and presented to the chevalier John Paul Jones, in commemoration of the valour and brilliant services of that officer, in the command of a squadron of French and American ships, under the flag and commission of the United States, off the coast of Great-Britain, in the late war; and that the Hon. Mr. Jefferson, minister plenipotentiary of the United States at the court of Versailles, have the same executed with the proper devices.

Resolved, That a letter be written to His Most Christian Majesty, informing him, that the United States in Congress assembled have bestowed upon the chev. John Paul Jones this medal, as well in consideration of the distinguished marks of approbation which his majesty has been pleased to confer upon that officer, as from a sense of his merit: and, that as it is his earnest desire to acquire greater knowledge in his profession, it would be acceptable to Congress, that his majesty would be pleased to permit him to embark with his fleets of evolution, convinced that he can no where else so well acquire that knowledge which may hereafter render him more extensively useful.

Ordered, That the secretary for foreign affairs prepare a letter for the above purpose, to be signed by the president; and that the chevalier Jones be the bearer of the said letter.

WEDNESDAY, October 17.

On motion of Mr. Irvine, seconded by Mr. Carrington,

Resolved, That the board of treasury be, and they are hereby authorised and directed to dispose of for specie or public securities, such of the public buildings at Carlisle in Pennsylvania, as in the opinion of the secretary at war are no longer necessary to be occupied by the United States, on the best terms that can be obtained.

SATURDAY, October 20.

On the report of a committee consisting of Messrs. Grayson, Clarke and Ross, to whom was referred a motion for a representation to the states of North-Carolina and Georgia, on the subject of surrendering a liberal portion of their territorial claims,

Resolved, That it be, and it is hereby represented to the states of North-Carolina and Georgia, that the lands which have been ceded by the other states in compliance with the recommendation of this body, are now selling in large quantities for public securities; that the deeds of cession from the different states have been made without annexing an express condition that they should not operate until the other states under like circumstances made similar cessions; and that Congress have such faith in the justice and magnanimity of the states of North Carolina and Georgia, that they only think it necessary to call their attention to these circumstances, not doubting but upon consideration of the subject, they will feel those obligations which will induce similar cessions, and justify that confidence which has been placed in them.

On a report of the secretary of the United States for the department of foreign affairs, to whom was referred a letter of the 2d of this present month October, from P. Bond, Esq; enclosing a commission from his Britannic Majesty, constituting George Miller, Esq; his consul and deputy commissary in the states of North-Carolina, South Carolina and Georgia:

Whereas George Miller, Esq; has communicated to the United States in Congress assembled a commission in due form, bearing date the 5th day of January, 1787, from his Britannic Majesty, constituting him the consul of his said majesty, in the states of North Carolina, South Carolina and Georgia; and although no commercial treaty or convention subsists between his majesty and the United States, whereby either have a perfect right to establish consuls or commissaries in the dominions of the other, yet, as the United States are disposed, by every proper mark of liberality and attention, to promote a good correspondence between the two countries, and particularly as amicable negociations are now depending between them,—therefore

Resolved, That the said George Miller be, and he is hereby received and recognized as the consul of his Britannic Majesty throughout the states of North-Carolina, South Carolina and Georgia, and that his commission be recorded in the secretary's office.

Resolved, That all the privileges, pre-eminences and authority which the laws of nations and of the land give a consul received by the United States, from any nation with whom they have no commercial treaty or convention, are due, and shall be enjoyed by the said George Miller, as consul for the three states above mentioned, and that certified copies of these resolutions be transmitted to the executives thereof for their information.

On a report of the secretary for foreign affairs, to whom was referred a letter to him from the minister of the United Netherlands, enclosing a note of the same date, complaining of an act of the legislature of the commonwealth of Virginia, exempting French brandies imported in French and American vessels from certain duties to which the like commodities imported in Dutch vessels are left liable, as being contrary to the 2d article in their treaty with the United States, stipulating that they shall be treated as the most favored nation:

Resolved, That whenever any of these States shall think proper to grant a favor to any foreign nation, such state ought to extend it to such other foreign nations, as by treaties with the United States, are to be treated as the most favoured nation.

Resolved, That a copy of the above resolution, and of the representation of the minister of the United Netherlands, be transmitted to the commonwealth of Virginia, to the end, that the legislature of that commonwealth may take the earliest opportunity of revising the act of which the said minister complains, and rendering the same perfectly consistent with the treaty subsisting between the United States and the United Netherlands, and of causing to be repaid whatever extra duties may, in virtue of the said act, be exacted on the brandies there imported in Dutch vessels, during the operation of the same.

From a late London Newspaper.

According to the calculation which has lately been formed of the land in Scotland, there are 17,728 000 acres, of which 11 000 000 are good acres. Allowing five acres for each inhabitant, it is supposed there may be provision for 2 200 000 people, or for 700,000 more than there are at pre[illegible] England contains 31,648,000 acres, of which 25 300,000 are fit for cultivation. The conclusion drawn is, that in England and Scotland, properly cultivated, there is provision for six millions of people, beyond the number now supported in them.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY.

Monday, October 29.

On motion and by special order, the report of the committee of arrangement was read a second time.

Ordered, that the part of the message and the papers which respect the disturbances of the county of Luzerne, and the measures taken by council in consequence, be committed to Messrs. Clymer, Wynkoop, Evans, Lowrey, Kennedy, George Heister, and M'Lene.

Ordered, that what relates to the sudden depreciation of the paper currency, be committed to Messrs. Fitzsimons, Findley, and Rittenhouse.

Ordered, that the recommendation of a reduction in the price of public lands, be committed to Messrs. Peters, Lowrey, and M'Lene.

Ordered, that that part recommending a new regulation of fees, be committed to Messrs. Clymer, Hubley, and Piper.

Ordered, that on the expediency of allowing further time for applications of the officers and soldiers of the Pennsylvania line, to take up lands, be committed to Messrs. Will, Willing, and Barr.

Ordered, that the requisition of Congress for the current year, go to the committee of ways and means.

Ordered, that the papers relative to raising 700 troops, be committed to Messrs. Peters, Lollar, and Schott.

Ordered, that the letter from the Pennsylvania Delegates in Congress, advising the purchase of a small tract of country on Lake Erie, be committed to Messrs. Whelen, Joseph Heister, and M'Lene.

The resolution of Congress on the subject of granting favors in commerce to foreign nations, requiring no immediate consideration, and

The recommendation of Congress to call a state convention, having been already acted upon, it is not necessary to commit either of them.

The secretary of the supreme executive council delivered a verbal message to the chair—stating the request of council, to have a committee appointed by the house in order to confer with them tomorrow morning on some recent disturbances at Wyoming.

Whereupon ordered, that the committee appointed on the Wyoming business, be directed to hold such conference.

Wednesday, November 7. P. M.

The speaker informed the house that there were but two articles on their files which had not been acted upon; and having read over the list of committees, he observed, that there seemed to be very little business before the general assembly, and that if the committees would be expeditious in making their reports, the session might soon be brought to a conclusion.

Thursday, November 8.

A petition from the philosophical society praying to be allowed a portion of the unappropriated lands of the state was presented, and being read a second time, referred to a committee.

The petition from the late proprietaries and sundry other petitions of a private nature were presented and ordered to lie on the table.

The committee on the petition from Richard Wells and John Clifford, reported a resolution, that a committee be appointed to bring in a bill for the relief of the petitioners, and to empower the executive council to release forfeitures in all future cases of similar hardship, the committee being of opinion that though council have the right to remit fines, they have no authority to release forfeitures. The report was ordered to lie on the table.

The secretary of the executive council delivered a message to the house, in which it is stated, that since passing the resolution for applying to Congress respecting the troops to be sent to Luzerne, the council had received information that the United States were not represented in Congress, and therefore, as the circumstances of that county would not admit of any further delay, they recommended it to the house to take immediate steps for the preservation of the public peace and authority therein. And as the expulsion of the commissioners had occasioned a considerable delay in executing the duty of their appointment, they recommended that the time limited for compleating it, should be extended by a supplemental law. The message likewise called the attention of the house to the former applications of colonel Mentges, who had performed some public services, for which he had received no compensation, and to a petition from captain Whelper, transmitted by council, as it was not in their power to grant the relief prayed. The message was taken up for a second reading, and committees appointed upon the several propositions therein contained.

Col Lowry presented a certificate from the judges of the first election district of Bedford county, stating that they had entertained doubts as to the legality of some votes which were given in, the tickets not being cut asunder, and referring the question to the decision of the house. Being read a second time, Mr. M'Lean moved for a postponement; but Mr. Lowry observed that it would be proper to give some satisfaction to the people on the subject, either to declare that the vote did not vitiate the election, or, if it did, to order a new election for the county. The proper way to ascertain these, he said, would be to send the certificate to a committee, which he moved the house to do, and Mr. Piper concurring in the motion, Mr. M'Lean withdrew his motion for a postponement, and a committee was accordingly appointed.

Mr. Lollar called for the third reading of the bill providing for the wages of the delegates to the ensuing convention, &c. but Mr. M'Lean wishing for a postponement as he had only that moment received a copy of the bill, it was agreed to make it the order of the day for to-morrow.

Mr. M'Lean requested to know what progress the committee of accounts had made in destroying the bills of credit, agreeably to the directions of the house; when Mr. Lollar said, that they had been employed two afternoons in that service, and should employ every vacant hour in accomplishing it. He added that about 8,000 bills had been destroyed, though they did not amount to much, being chiefly of the smaller denominations.

The speaker again stated to the house that so little business was before the general assembly, that if the committees would be expeditious in making their reports, he could perceive no obstacle to closing the sessions on Saturday week. He then read an abstract specifying the number of days which each sessions had lasted for the two foregoing years, from which it appeared that the present might be made considerably the shortest, so as to save a sum of 8000 dollars, the daily expence of the legislature, while sitting, being at least, 200 dollars.

Several members expressed their approbation of every measure that tended to reduce the public burthen, and in order to expedite business, they appointed to-morrow for calling on the committees to report.

The house adjourned till to-morrow morning at half past nine o'clock.

On VIRTUE.

OF Virtue's pleasing laws I sing,
Those pleasing laws divine;
Which ev'ry bliss substantial bring,
Oh! may that bliss be mine.

The virt'ous cause my mind inspires,
With rapture's sweetest charm;
The lovely song divinely fires;
And shields from ev'ry harm.

Content of mind and happy peace,
The Heaven born theme does give;
It joys the peasant and the prince
In goodly acts to live.

ORIGINAL ANECDOTE.

SINCE the beginning of the last year, a native of Ireland arrived in Georgia, amply recommended as a person long and usefully employed in the University in the city of Dublin, and as a very proper person to fill a chair of education in this country. The inhabitants of that state, with a liberality and public spirit in the highest degree honorable to them, have lately founded several seminaries for the instruction of youth; and, at that time were endeavoring to find proper persons to preside in them. The gentleman in question, totally superior to the generality of these people in this interesting particular, that he was recommended as knowing something of the business he solicited, was on the verge of being elevated to the chair of the university in that state; when, from a recollection of past impositions, it was thought expedient to experiment his abilities and character in a humbler station. In pursuance of this design he was placed in the superintendency of one of the State Academies. Here he was viewed merely as a practitioner for superior distinction, and the public waited with the most confidential hopes of his elevation to all the advantages they could offer him. A little trial exhibited to them how justly their expectations were formed. He had been seated but a few months, when a gentleman of reputation found him, one morning, a few miles from the town where he resided, engaged at fisticuffs with a waggoner, and deciding in that dignified manner, their respective titles to a strumpet, whom the waggoner was carrying off, and to whom the Academician asserted the superior claim of prior occupancy.

Philadelphia, October 16, 1787.

For Grist Mills & other Water Works

On an extensive Plan,

One of the best situations in America is offered

FOR SALE,

Together With

Batsto Iron-Works;

At the forks of Little Egg-Harbour river, one of the most healthy spots in New Jersey, 38 miles by land from Philadelphia, and within a few hours sail of New York.

THE river, communicating with the sea by the best inlet on the Jersey coast, is navigable for vessels of 200 tons within a few miles of the works; those of 100 tons may approach within one mile; flats and scows, carrying 10 or 12 tons, load and unload at the works. The usual freight to New York or Philadelphia is 10 shillings per ton. The furnace stream affords plenty of water, in the dryest season, for 3 or 4 pair of mill stones, besides supplying the iron works.——An excellent dam, which has been increasing in strength many years by the cinder from the furnace, is well secured from the danger of freshes, and the works are scarcely ever injured or delayed by either ice or backwater, though the tide swells to the foot of the dam: mills may therefore be erected at a moderate expence. This being a part of the country in which many people and many teams are necessarily employed in collecting and preparing for market the iron and lumber with which it abounds, and at the same time illy adapted to the raising of grain for their support, there is, and must continue to be, a demand for large quantities of midlings, cornell, shorts and bran, at advanced prices; and the conveniency of conveying flour at a light expence, either to New York or Philadelphia, or to more distant markets, will not be overlooked nor considered as of small importance, especially as there are few mill seats of any considerable capacity equally adapted to the New York market, which is not unfrequently supplied with superfine flour from Philadelphia. A choice of the various kinds of wheat may be drawn to this seat from Virginia, Maryland, Delaware, New Jersey, and New York with greater ease and convenience than to almost any other mills now in being.

The FURNACE, which by the extensive lands annexed to it, is abundantly supplied with wood and ore, is now in blast, and is noted for producing the best hollow ware in America, the metal being peculiarly well adapted to the making of castings of all kinds, as well as excellent bar iron.

A FORGE, with four fires and two hammers, belongs to the estate, and stands about half a mile from the furnace, on another fine stream which affords plenty of water.

A SLITTING and ROLLING MILL, having been disused for the last two or three years, may want some repairs to prepare it for use; but the forebays and gates are in perfect order, and being in the proper spot for grist mills, may be appropriated to that use.

Two SAW MILLS in good order, and a small Grist Mill.

The MANSION HOUSE is elegantly situated about 100 yards from the furnace, on an height which commands a view of the whole works, and of the two villages formed by the surrounding buildings belonging to the estate, such as barns, stables, coal houses, workshops, storehouses and dwellings for workmen. Adjoining the mansion house is a large and fruitful garden, affording plenty of vegetables, and well stored with chosen fruit trees; also a young bearing orchard, containing near 2000 apple trees, mostly grafted.

These excellent accommodations for extensive and profitable manufactories, are offered to sale at a very low rate, and on terms of payment calculated for the ease of the purchaser, who may pay the greater part in the produce of the Iron Works, at a price to be agreed upon; and they are capable of producing more in one year, than will pay the whole price demanded.

For particulars, apply to WILLIAM RICHARDS, at the said Works, JOHN COX, at Bloomsbury, near Trenton, or CHARLES PETTIT, in Philadelphia.

Foreign Intelligence.

LIVERPOOL, July 30.

IN addition to the many auricular proofs we have had of the oral correctneſs of pariſh clerks, the following has been communicated to us by a correſpondent, whoſe veracity we cannot queſtion:—Paſſing through a village near Shrewſbury, not many days ago, his attention was excited by an annunciation, from the mouth of one of the above perſonages, in the following words: "I am to give notice, that whereas King George the Third of London, has ordered his proclamation to be read in our church, next Sunday, for the ſuppreſſion of immortality—after which there will be a piece of beef roaſted at my houſe, the Kings-head, for all comers and goers—and on Monday a large badger will be baited up my backſide."

An Extraordinary Character, found in a little village in Provence in France.——A gentleman who has ſent us the account informs us, that arriving there he ſought the beſt houſe of entertainment he could find, where he might lodge that night. He had no ſooner alighted, than he aſked for a blackſmith. The hoſt offered his ſervices. The gentleman accepted them; and whilſt the horſe was ſhoeing, a perſon came to have an act ſtipulated. The blackſmith, now the notary, ſigned the deed—at the ſame time informing his gueſt that he was likewiſe a ſolicitor and an advocate. A moment after, a perſon came to deſire he would inſtantly viſit a ſick patient. The notary, now a phyſician, attended his patient, and when he returned, convinced the gentleman that he was not only a phyſician, but an apothecary and ſurgeon—and offered to give a ſpecimen of his talents, either in preſcribing a doſe of phyſic, or performing an operation.——"All my apartments (ſaid he) are devoted to ſome or other of my trades. Behold my laboratory on the left, my ſurgery on the right—my ſtudy between both—my kitchen below—my rooms for my gueſts before—my chambers to lodge them behind—and my forge at the bottom of my court. But although I have ſo many employments, yet I find times ſo miſerably bad, that I can ſcarcely obtain a ſubſiſtence."—May we not ſay with propriety of this univerſal man—OMNIS HOMO?

The account lately publiſhed of a ſhepherd being killed by a bull at Cotworth in Northampton, in reſentment for having beaten him, reminds a correſpondent of an account written by capt. Thompſon, when an officer in the Eaſt-Indies. "This morning, (ſays he in his letter) I was witneſs to the terrible reſentment and ſagacity of an elephant. It had been cuſtomary with a ſeapoy belonging to Meer Jaffier to feed two of his elephants not above ten yards from my windows. I had obſerved him yeſterday ſcoop out the fruit and milk of a large cocoa, and offer the elephant the ſhell, which he received in his proboſcis. One of the animals went away into the neighbouring copſe, but the other remained the whole day ſeemingly ſulky. This morning I was alarmed at ſome loud cries, which was the unfortunate ſeapoy toſſed by the elephant into the air with his trunk, and afterwards trampling his life out. He then produced the ſhell, which he had retained in his trunk, and placed it on the body of the feeder, as a ſeeming juſtification from the inſult he had received to provoke his vengeance."

LONDON,

Auguſt 26. Letters were received in town from Oſtend yeſterday, the major part of which expreſs the preſent deranged ſtate of the affairs in the two Netherlands, in the moſt lively terms. In Holland they relate the reception of propoſals from the king of Pruſſia, for an accommodation between the ſtadtholder and the Hollanders, which they ſeem to think will have the deſired effect, eſpecially as they are likely to meet the approbation of a certain court, who are not in a condition for taking a contrary part juſt at this time. In the Auſtrian Netherlands affairs carry a contrary aſpect; on the part of the ſtates a determined oppoſition: and on thoſe of the emperor, their ſovereign, as complete a determination to carry his plans into execution at any rate. For this purpoſe, at Bruſſels, at Antwerp and Bruges, they are preparing for the reception of troops; the oſtenſible reaſon of whoſe appearance is the preſent ſtate of affairs in Holland, but whoſe real object is to force a compliance with the imperial mandate and plan of regulations. The ſtates of Auſtria ſpeak highly, and talk of determined reſiſtance at all hazards. Such things are.

Count de Murray, governor general of the Low Countries, has publiſhed a note, under date the 6th inſtant, which has been ſent to the different ſtates of the Low Countries, declaring:

That he will not heſitate to inform them that the emperor is not pleaſed with their laſt diſpatch, of the 18th of July, which announced, that, on the part of the people, impreſſions contrary to the confidence that his majeſty expected from all claſſes of his ſubjects, whilſt it gave birth to ideas contrary to the dignity of a ſovereign.

"His majeſty thought that theſe circumſtances rendered a meeting of his troops neceſſary, otherwiſe the ſtate and nation could not expect to ſee peace properly reſtored.

"His majeſty, however, expreſsly authorized his excellency to aſſure them, that this meeting of his troops had not for its object any deſign againſt the conſtitution of the country, or any other ſteps contrary to the laws.

"The ſtates and all the nation muſt be ſenſible no doubt, that he was doing nothing contrary to the conſtitution, by marching his troops; and all inquietude or diſtruſt on this ſubject, would juſtly cauſe his majeſty to doubt the truth of the aſſertions which the ſtates had made of their fidelity and attachment, which they had announced on the 28th of July, and the intention of treating them paternally, with other ſubjects of general welfare, addreſſed to the ſtates of Brabant on the 3d of July, by his majeſty, as it would be a ſcandal for all Europe, if, after the bounties which his majeſty had announced, his ſubjects ONLY could have the idea of his troops remaining only in a ſtate of inaction, (as if they were in the ſervice of ſome foreign prince) and in ſimple quarters on a march.

"The conduct of the nation, reſpecting the meeting of the troops, being, among others, regarded by his majeſty, as the touchſtone of their confidence and their faith. His majeſty, at the ſame time, has given his excellency to underſtand, that, according as he was informed the nation behaved, he would give a qualification that the German troops deſigned for the Low Countries ſhould not paſs the frontiers of his hereditary ſtates except the regiment of Bender, which his majeſty, for particular reaſons of ſervice, had thought neceſſary to ſend to Luxembourg.

The following remarkable and conciſe ſpeech was made by admiral Hawke, to the officers of his ſquadron at Gibraltar, on taking the command from Mr Byng, and hoiſting his flag:—"Gentlemen, I ſhall trouble you with few ſignals; the French we muſt fight; I ſhall give the ſignal for cloſe engagement, and expect every one will go cloſe as I ſhall; there are only two choices—Fight, or be hanged!"

The weavers of Spitalfields have of late been under dreadful apprehenſions on account of the prodigious riſe in the article of raw ſilk, expecting their manufactory to be totally ruined; but we are now aſſured, that ſilk goods are coming more into wear than for ſeveral years paſt, the ladies preferring that article when dear, and out of the reach of common people.

The duke of York, we learn, was only five days on his journey from Hanover, his route was exceeding private, for though he came through part of France and Flanders, he did not touch at the capitals of either.

AMERICA.

SALEM, Oct. 30.

A friend at Marblehead favors us with the following particulars of a late melancholy occurrence: "The moſt aſtoniſhing ſcenes are continually pouring in upon our minds in this place; to ſtrengthen and eſtabliſh our belief in a governing Providence, and at the ſame time keep alive every tender ſenſibility of the human heart.

"This day arrived from ſea, Mr. Anthony Jones, cloathed with the melancholy tidings, that the ſchooner Waſhington, in the hurricane of the 29th of Auguſt, was upſet and entirely loſt—adding, like the meſſenger of Job, this moſt diſtreſſing part, and I only have eſcaped to tell you.

"The maſter, captain Samuel Gale, has left, beſides a numerous family, a widow diſconſolate for the loſs of a child as well as huſband, in the affecting cataſtrophe—ſtill further heightened by the circumſtance of another at home, arrived at mature age, already, to appearance, encircled within the arms of death. The mate, Mr. William Ingals, has left a parent in the bittereſt anguiſh for the loſs of an only ſon, and her only earthly ſupport; beſides a train of little ones, and a companion juſt ready to have preſented him with a new pledge of their conjugal affection.

"The relator of this ſorrowful tale eſcaped in a moſt marvelous manner. His firſt attempt for ſafety was by throwing himſelf into the ſea, and then returning to the hull, unto which he clung for the ſpace of an hour; but being waſhed off, his next alternative was ſwimming to a piece of the fore boom, not larger than a buoy, which was floating along, on which he ſupported himſelf for 13 hours more, in the midſt of the tumultuous ſea. The only gleam of hope, which dawned upon him, aroſe from the appearance of a diſabled brig, bearing towards him, but, when arrived, not a boat was left belonging to her, to take in the poor ſupplicant. Though faint, and ſeemingly exhauſted, ſufficiency of ſtrength remained, properly to ſecure around his own body a rope, thrown out for the purpoſe, by means of which he was drawn into this ark of ſafety, to the no ſmall joy and ſurpriſe of the humane and generous ſtrangers.

"His gratitude was augmented by ſeeing, in a few moments after he was received on board, a multitude of ſharks, thoſe fiſhes of prey, hovering around them; though not one was diſcovered by him, when in his former perilous ſituation.

"While we triumph in the goodneſs of God towards this man, human reaſon would have been for ſelecting a different perſon for the ſubject of this aſtoniſhing deliverance, in the room of him, who has not a ſingle dependant. But God's ways are not as our ways. nor his thoughts as our thoughts."

We hear from Beverly, that yeſterday morning, a midwife in that place attended the birth of a child, which completed 2000 times of her being preſent on ſimilar occaſions.

Vaſt quantities of hemp have this year been raiſed in the ſettlements on Hudſon's river, in the ſtate of New-York. The raiſing of hemp is encouraged in that ſtate by a conſiderable bounty.

NORTHAMPTON, Oct. 31.

There are certain periods in human concerns, that are deſigned in providence, and no doubt wiſely ordered by the Deity to try the patience and fortitude of the members of every community. Whether the object is for the puniſhment, or the purifying its inhabitants, is not material, as one or the other of theſe purpoſes ſeem abſolutely neceſſary ſhould take place; in order that individuals ſhould be rouſed from the natural ſloth and indolence that characteriſes humanity. The preſent moment ſeems to be the moſt important, and the moſt critical of any period within the memory of man; and to which every great and important tranſaction of a public nature has pointed theſe 25 years; and every moment ſeems to create new matter which will be productive either of building up a great and boundleſs empire, or circumſcribing ſcanty and narrow limits for the inhabitants of this country, ſuited only for ſavage chiefs or barbarous tyrants—the latter will inevitably be the conſequence, ſhould we reject the government offered for our acceptance. A change in our ſyſtem is unavoidable—every countenance indicates the ſtrongeſt ſymptoms of a new birth—and nothing but our own folly and madneſs can prevent our growing up to manhood, and eſtabliſh our empire as on a rock.

My countrymen, the happineſs of one & all is the ſame, I conſider myſelf as one of the whole—every member of the community is upon one footing. This new offered government is equal, every individual is a fair candidate for the higheſt ſeat in the empire, which is a matter unknown to every nation in the world, which muſt be a moſt powerful incentive and ſpur to every laudable exertion to be virtuous and learned; which, thanks be to Heaven, is the only ſure road to honor and preferment.

We hear, that laſt week, one Hills of Eaſt-Hartford, a young man, who with others had been building and loading a veſſel, in executing which he met with much difficulty, and who had grown very penſive, left his bed very early on Monday morning, and ſometime after was found dead in the barn, having hung himſelf. A paper, which he left directed to his brother, contained theſe words—Promiſe no man more than you can pay—giving directions relative to the buſineſs in which he had been engaged, and bidding him adieu. The jury's verdict was wilful murder.

This melancholy event affords inſtruction. It is not good to embarraſs ourſelves with too many concerns—to undertake more than we can comfortably perform. It is not commonly well to run into debt, nor engage payment when the means are not in our power. We muſt reſiſt the temptations of the Devil. Never to get rid of one evil, plunge into an other much greater. All ſhould know that the diſpoſal of life is not with them—He who gave it only may take it either immediately or mediately. It ſhould be preſerved by every ſuitable method. He who lays violent hands on himſelf, aggravates his other ſins by ſuicide, and throws himſelf into the immediate preſence of that Being whom he offends, and to whom he muſt anſwer for the laſt act of his life, when probably there is no room for repentance.

HUDSON, Nov. 1.

On Thurſday laſt Mr. Hamilton Biſhop, of this city, cord-wainer, put a period to his exiſtence by ſtabbing himſelf with his knife, the coroner's inqueſt being ſummoned, ſat upon the body, and after hearing the evidences, &c. brought in their verdict lunacy. Mr. Biſhop has for ſome time paſt been uneaſy in his mind at intervals, but has always been attentive to his buſineſs, till the morning he committed the horrid deed, when he appeared to be careleſs and inattentive.

Philadelphia, Nov. 13.

The following gentlemen are elected members of the enſuing Convention of this ſtate:——

MONTGOMERY County.	F. A. Mühlenberg, James Morris, John Richards, Jonathan Roberts.
BUCKS.	Henry Wynkoop, Thomas Yardley, John Bartley, Abraham Stout.
NORTHAMPTON.	John Arndt, Stephen Balliot, Joſeph Horsfield, David Deſhler.
LANCASTER.	Jaſper Yates, Stephen Chambers, John Whitehill, John Hubley, Robert Coleman, Sebaſtian Graff.
YORK.	Thomas Hartley, Henry Slagle, David Grier, John Black, Benjamin Pedie, Thomas Campbell.
CUMBERLAND.	Robert Whitehill, Jonathan Hoge, John Harris, John Jordon.
DAUPHIN.	William Brown, Adam Ort, John Hanna.

The above, together with thoſe inſerted in our paper of Saturday laſt, are all the returns that have been yet received.

In the General Aſſembly on Wedneſday the 31ſt ult. Mr. G. Clymer preſented the report (in part) of the committee on the papers, &c. which reſpect the diſturbances at Wyoming. He obſerved, that in the conference they had with the ſupreme executive council, on this ſubject, in obedience to the reſolve of the houſe, they learned, that council were of opinion, a permanent force of enliſted troops were requiſite to be ſtationed in that country, in order to ſupport the civil officers in the diſcharge of their duties, and to awe the violence of the conſpirators; they ſuppoſe the militia might be able to take poſſeſſion of the country, but could not be of further ſervice, which in their opinion will not be effectual and concluſive. There were received accounts of ſeveral alarming circumſtances, in conſequence of the ſeizure of Franklin.

The late election of militia officers had like to have thrown an improper power into the hands of the enemies of our government.—It was apprehended, that nothing but the timely ſeizure of Franklin prevented his appointment to the office of colonel.

The diſturbers of the peace had entered into an aſſociation, and had been joined by ſome, no doubt prompted thereto by a regard to their perſonal ſafety, but otherwiſe well attached to our laws and government, and who will exert themſelves to effect the re eſtabliſhment of good order, when countenanced by a permanent force, maintained for the expreſs purpoſe of ſuppreſſing thoſe diſturbances and reſtoring quiet to the ſettlement.

The committee joining in ſentiment with council, have agreed to report ſuch a number of troops as they deem adequate to the ſervice: tho' it might appear a ſmall body, yet it would be ſufficient, as no doubt was entertained but a large part of the inhabitants would ſteadily co-operate with them.

The reſolution was received at the chair, and read as follows:

Reſolved, that as in the opinion of this houſe, a permanent force of enliſted troops may be neceſſary to ſecure the peace of the county of Luzerne; the ſupreme executive council be authoriſed and required to obtain the permiſſion of Congreſs, to raiſe any number of troops for the aforeſaid purpoſe, not exceeding 500 men.

Mr. M'Lene could not help remarking upon this mode of introducing reports; he had been on this committee, with the gentleman who had juſt preſented it, and knew there were two reſolutions agreed to by the committee, he was much ſurpriſed to ſee it mutilated.

Mr. G. Clymer roſe to inform the houſe, that though two reſolutions were yeſterday agreed to by the committee, they had a meeting ſince, when it was determined to introduce this one, to the attention of the houſe, as a matter of importance, which it would be improper to delay. If the gentleman was not acquainted with this tranſaction, he had only to blame himſelf, as yeſterday, the committee had agreed to meet again this morning;—let him attend to this in any remarks he may be about to make, and then ſay what he pleaſes.

Mr. M'Lene was about to have informed the Speaker when he was interrupted by the gentleman from the city, that he had the honor of being on the committee to whom this buſineſs was referred; it was true the committee had agreed to the reſolution preſented, but it was on the proviſo that it was accompanied by another, which ſix out of the ſeven members appointed, had alſo acquieſced in.—If the gentlemen have ſince altered their opinion, it was unknown to him; he was in the committee room, when the gentlemen were conferring, but no one ſpoke to him about this change. Now he would be glad to know how it was that this reſolution came alone. The other reſolution, he ſaid, had been agreed to by ſix out of ſeven, and was intended to ſuſpend the operation of the law, under which the commiſſioners ſent up to Wyoming act in veſting the rights of Pennſylvanians in the Connecticut claimants. This meaſure if he recollects right had been acceded to; in hopes of giving quiet to the ſettlement, and it being better than to have recourſe to arms: affairs ſeem now to be ſo far changed as to make it neceſſary, after all, to employ force to quell the turbulence of theſe people.—Now, will it be right, to continue giving away the property of the inhabitants of the ſtate, in order to effect what it is found inadequate to? For what purpoſe are we to keep up a permanent force? or if we keep a permanent force, of what uſe is it to give away the property of our citizens, and encumber the ſtate with a heavy expence?

The Speaker told the gentleman (Mr. M'Lene) he muſt be under the neceſſity of calling him to order, if he did not confine himſelf to ſtate the impropriety of preſenting the report, as it was highly inconſiſtent to indulge him in going into a general examination of the merits of the buſineſs.

Mr. M'Lene proceeded—I was only going to ſhew the impropriety of the report being admitted in that form, and I believe every member of a committee has a right to object, if the report that committee is not fairly preſented.

The Speaker did not object to ſuch obſervations but forbid entering into the merits of the report.

Mr. M'Lene continued—well, ſir, and I was only going to ſhew the grounds upon which the report originated, in order to demonſtrate the impropriety of admitting this reſolution alone. I ſay, ſir, that the committee conſidering the impropriety of continuing the operation of the exiſting law, at a time when it is neceſſary to have recourſe to arms——

The Speaker now called the member to order, and ſtated the queſtion to which the debate muſt be confined: A reſolution is preſented as the report of a committee; an objection is raiſed by a member of that committee, that the report is imperfect and not as concurred in by ſix out of the ſeven gentlemen appointed to prepare the report. The queſtion is, ſhall this report lie on your table? which precludes all debate on the merits of the matter reported, but that will be properly before the houſe on the ſecond reading.

Mr. Clymer would ſatisfy the gentleman, as to that part of his conduct he ſeems ſo much offended at; but I will ſtill obſerve, ſir, that there is no ſuch irregularity in preſenting the report as he is apprehenſive of. The majority of the committee, as I obſerved before, did laſt evening concur in the two reſolutions the member has mentioned, but ſir, the committee have met ſince, in conformity to their appointment of laſt evening, and this appointment and meeting ſerve to ſhew that the reſolutions were not determined, but in the power of the committee to correct, reviſe or annul, as the majority ſhould think proper:—This being the caſe five or ſix of the members met this morning, and determined on preſenting the firſt only.

And conſequently the houſe may paſs a deciſion on this reſolution, as totally diſtinct and unconnected with the other.

Mr. Wynkoop acknowledged his having agreed with the other gentleman in making report for the preſent of this reſolution only—but he conceived the report to be a report in part, and that the committee were not diſſolved, in conſequence of having reported what was now preſented, but were ſtill at liberty to report further, as might appear to them proper.

Mr Kennedy acknowledged, as a member of the committee, that the ſtatement of the buſineſs was as related by the chairman of the committee, (Mr. Clymer) and the gentleman near him (Mr. Wynkoop) he had agreed with them in making report immediately of this reſolution, as the intelligence which council had communicated to them made expedition proper—He was ſtill though of the ſame opinion with reſpect to the other reſolution mentioned by the member near him (Mr. M'Lene) and thought is a very proper one, and hoped it would ſhortly be reported.

Mr. M'Lene. If the report is only a report in part, and the other reſolution may be brought on, he had no objection to letting it lie on the table, but he had been apprehenſive it was a report in full, and the committee conſequently diſcharged.

The oppoſition being withdrawn, the report was ordered to lie on the table.

On motion and by ſpecial order, the report of the committee on the Wyoming buſineſs was read a ſecond time.

Mr. M'Lene called for the reading of the ſeveral communications made by council to the committee, by which the reſolution had been occaſioned, whereupon they were preſented by Mr. George Clymer.

The firſt was a letter from his excellency George Clinton, governor of the ſtate of New-York, aſſuring his excellency the preſident of his determination, ſteadily to co-operate with this ſtate, in taking every meaſure to bring the malcontents of the weſtern country to condign and exemplary puniſhment.

Extracts from ſeveral other letters were read, when on motion of Mr. Peters, ordered, that the further reading thereof be poſtponed.

The queſtion was taken on the reſolution and agreed to.

On motion of Mr Peters, the report of the committee on that part of the meſſage relative to raiſing ſeven hundred federal troops, for the protection of the ſettlers on the frontiers, was read a ſecond time and adopted. The reſolution contained in the report went to the appointment of a committee to bring in a bill comply with the recommendation of Congreſs in this particular, whereupon Ordered, that the committee be Meſſrs. Peters, Lollar and Schott.

A petition from the adminiſtrators, and major part of the legal repreſentatives (in perſon or by guardians) of Ann Nedrow, deceaſed, was read, ſetting forth, that divers real eſtates in the counties of Philadelphia, Lancaſter and Montgomery were deviſed unto the ſaid Ann by her brother Richard Johnſon, that the ſaid Ann at the time of the aforeſaid deviſe, and until the time of her death, was under coverture, whereby ſhe was diſabled from making diſtribution of her eſtate, that from the numerous deſcendants of the ſaid deceaſed, it is become impracticable, to procure a partition of the ſaid eſtate, without the interference of the legiſlature, therefore praying leave to bring in a bill, authoriſing the adminiſtrators to the eſtate of her late daughter Ann Keyſer, to ſettle and diſpoſe of the ſame, for the benefit of the heirs, and on motion and by ſpecial order, the ſame was read the ſecond time, and referred to a grand committee of claims, conſiſting of Meſſrs. Hiltzheimer, Logan, Fouke, Moore, Clemſon, Clingan, Beale, Davis, Trexler, Piper, Maclay, Barr, Allison, Gilchriſt, M'Calmont, Richards, Muey, Schott and Daviſon to report thereon.

For the Pennsylvania Packet and Daily Advertiser.

On the chusing a Convention in Pennsylvania, for the purpose of considering the Federal Constitution.

HAIL, happy fair auspicious morn!
To this new world a child is born,
The radiant sun is near:—
He tips with gold the western hills,
Reflected in the murmuring rills,
Our dawn of hope is clear.

The waining moon steals soft away,
But soon she will with new beams play,
The empress of the night:
The beauteous stars, so fine and clear,
Retire, whilst dropping dews appear,
Lost in a flood of light!

The golden bright imperial sun
His glorious course begins to run,
Most fruitful be his year:—
A blessed harvest may we find,
Each bleeding heart for to unbind,
Dry up each bursting tear.

Of darkness tear away the vail,
The time is come, let light prevail,
All hearts with joy rebound!
Earth's sons are bless'd, the woman's seed
All powerfully for man doth plead,
All healing it is found.

Contentions cease—the sacred bed
Of truth and justice raise its head!
All fed'ral is the plan:—
Indissoluble union join,
Nor state from state again purloin
The peaceful rights of man.

Let friendly intercourse prevail,
No little selfish schemes assail,
Said WASHINGTON the great! *
Will you not hear your father's call,
He loves his children one and all,
He loves you from his heart.

"These are the pillars" where you stand,
Your fabric else is built on sand,
Will soon be swept away:
But here you build upon a rock,
Whose sure foundations stand the shock,
And hail a new-born day!

Ye heralds of this glorious morn,
Let Liberty your theme adorn,
Sweet Liberty the fair!
With raven locks see how she soars!
And visits all these western shores,
Pay tribute to her pray'r.

Hark! hark! sweet anthems shrill and loud!
Proclaim their sov'reign from a cloud,
Messiah is your king!
The stars which usher'd in your day
Do to the world new light convey,
And joyful news do bring.

Peace to all men with love they bring,
And sweetly in their course shall sing,
Till endless be the light—
Night's sable curtain then must fly!
The tears be wip'd from ev'ry eye,
When all will be full bright.

Philadelphia, Nov. 7. 1787.

* See General Washington's circular letter—where there are four things which he conceives to be essentially necessary, viz. "An indissoluble union of the states under one federal head; 2d, a sacred regard to public justice; 3d, the adoption of a proper peace establishment; 4th, the prevalence of that pacific and friendly disposition among the people of the United States, which will induce them to forget their local prejudices and policies—to make those mutual concessions which are requisite to the general prosperity, and in some instances to sacrifice their individual advantages to the interest of the community."—He goes on—"These are the pillars on which the glorious fabric of our independency and national character must be supported."

ANECDOTE.

ROCHEFOCAULT (the French Rochester of Lewis the fourteenth's court) having offended the king, hired a dung-cart, and stripping himself quite naked, got up to the chin in it, just as his majesty was passing through the streets of Paris in state; the dung-cart man, as instructed, immediately fell wrangling with one of the king's postilions, which occasioned so much noise, that the king put his head out of the window to know what was the matter. Rochefocault, watching the opportunity, raised himself forward in the cart, all bemired as he was, and bowing very respectfully to his majesty, replied, "Nothing at all, Sire, but that your coachman and mine have had a fracas together."

Oct. 29. 12ſp. THOMAS PENROSE.

Meſſrs. PRINTERS,

AS the Conſtitution framed by the late Continental Convention, is an object of the greateſt magnitude, and upon the adoption or rejection of which the happineſs or miſery of this country greatly depends, I am happy to find it has become a ſubject of general diſcuſſion, and that many able pens are employed in the inveſtigation of its nature and principles; every thing, therefore, that hath any relation to this buſineſs muſt be intereſting and of importance to the public, the ſeceſſion of the minority of the late houſe of aſſembly having connection with this matter, and being ſeverely reprobated by many who are, perhaps, ignorant of the principles which influenced their conduct. I have taken the liberty as one of that minority, of ſtating to the public, through the medium of your paper, the motives which induced us to take ſuch a meaſure.

In the formation of every good government, every innovation ſhould be carefully guarded againſt, as it is much eaſier to prevent than to remedy evils; therefore, in every free government, the power of putting a negative upon particular laws, is lodged in ſuch a man or body of men, as have not the power of enacting laws. Thus, in Britain, a compleat negative is veſted not only in each houſe of parliament, but alſo in the king, whereas the concurrence of king, lords, and commons are neceſſary to enact a law. The deſpotiſm of the French monarchy is much reſtrained by the powers lodged with the parliament of Paris, of preventing the operation of any new laws, by refuſing to regiſter them. When the Roman republic was in the zenith of its glory, the negative of a ſingle tribune was ſufficient to prevent the enacting of a law, but the concurrence of twelve tribunes was neceſſary to make any new law or innovation. In the republic of Genoa, four-fifths of the ſenate muſt to any new law; conſequently if even forty ſhould concur in the meaſure, it might be prevented by eleven.

But to come nearer home. In our neighbouring ſtates, the majority of the ſenate or upper houſe have a compleat negative over the whole legiſlature, which amounts in moſt caſes, to one exerciſing a compleat negative over eight, ten, or twelve.

The framers of the conſtitution of Pennſylvania, ſenſible of the neceſſity of preventing innovations, have alſo provided ſufficient checks; and though our legiſlature conſiſts of but one branch, and it is not in the power of a ſingle magiſtrate, or a majority of a ſmall upper houſe to put a negative on our laws, or prevent what they might think improper innovations; yet, even in this government which derives its greateſt ſecurity from reſponſibility & neceſſary rotation, no bills can be enacted into laws, except in caſes of ſudden neceſſity, without being publiſhed for conſideration from ſeſſion to ſeſſion, and thus laying them before the people, together with the yeas and nays, and reaſons for the vote, if any two members require it; but as the houſe are neceſſarily judges of the ſudden neceſſity which may exiſt for enacting laws haſtily, the conſtitution has carefully guarded againſt any attempt of deſigning men, who may, from the prevailing influence of ſome improper or dangerous intereſt, proſtitute the cry of public neceſſity to cloak their ambition, and thus attempt ſuch innovations as the minority may think unconſtitutional and highly miſchievous, to prevent which, our form of government provides, that a quorum of not leſs than two thirds of the whole number elected, ſhall be neceſſarily preſent in order to do buſineſs. Thus, a negative check is clearly erected, and the exerciſe thereof veſted in ſuch a minority as ſhall exiſt of a little more than one third of the whole number elected: This is clearly a conſtitutional check, the legiſlature have not the power of preventing it, and the members who ſhall exerciſe it, are reſponſible to their conſtituents only for their conduct.

This negative has been often put in practice; there is an inſtance of its having been done twice in one day; but as, perhaps, the houſe was not of the greateſt importance, or what is more probable, that the majority were not aided by a mob; theſe inſtances made very little noiſe, nor was the exerciſe of this negative ever attempted to be prevented, until the day of 1784; when near the cloſe of the laſt ſeſſion of the houſe, a bill was brought forward for reviving the teſt laws, this, the minority conſidered as a matter in which their conſtituents ought to be conſulted, and for the enacting of which, there was no ſudden neceſſity, they, therefore, conſidered the enacting thereof in ſuch a manner, as a wilful breach of the conſtitution, and judged it to be their duty to avail themſelves of every means which the conſtitution itſelf put in their power to preſerve it inviolable, and conſequently put a ſtop to the buſineſs, until it come before their conſtituents; but on this occaſion, the doors were attempted to be ſhut, and force was uſed to detain the members, therefore, they did not return to finiſh the buſineſs of the houſe, apprehending that if they acted under compulſion or the power of a mob, whatever was done, would not be binding on the citizens, becauſe freedom of acting is indiſpenſible to the exerciſe of legiſlative authority. The caſe, of courſe, came before the people, and they decided, by approving of, and returning the members who diſſented, and by rejecting the majority of thoſe who urged on the buſineſs.

The next occaſion when this negative was exerciſed, was on the 28th day of September laſt, being expected (at leaſt by many of the members) to be the laſt day of the houſe ſitting, when a reſolution was propoſed by one of the members (who had alſo been a member of the late Fœderal Convention) for calling a ſtate convention, to be elected in the greateſt part of the ſtate, within about ten days, for the purpoſe of examining and adopting the propoſed new conſtitution for the government of the United States. To offer a reſolution of ſuch importance at that late hour, to take it up inſtantly, without giving the members who did not expect ſuch an attempt, and were conſequently wholly unprepared, time, even until the afternoon for adviſement, was truly extraordinary. But, when it is conſidered that the adopting of the propoſed plan may, in its conſequences alter, or even annihilate the conſtitution of our own ſtate under which we act, and which is the rule and meaſure of our legiſlative authority, and to preſerve which inviolate, we had in the preſence of God, and of each other, ſolemnly plighted our faith; every unprejudiced perſon will allow we ought to have taken time to deliberate. Even the council of cenſors, who have the conſtitutional right to propoſe alterations or amendments to the conſtitution, yet are ſtrictly prohibited from calling a convention to adopt ſuch alterations or amendments, until they are publiſhed at leaſt ſix months for the conſideration of the people. But in the preſent inſtance, the aſſembly were called upon by ſurprize, to propoſe eſſential alterations in the forms of government, without having received any new powers for that purpoſe from the people, but being expreſsly guarded from doing it, both by the powers delegated to them, and by their own ſolemn oaths, and without permitting the people to know or judge of the importance of thoſe alterations in their government, which they were thus called upon to adopt or reject, or the relative fitneſs of the perſons whom they were about to elect for the propoſed convention, or without the ſhadow of neceſſity for going into the meaſure with precipitation, as no injury could ariſe from deferring the buſineſs, until the meeting of the new houſe, who would at leaſt enjoy implied powers for that purpoſe, and might have ſufficient information from the people, to enable them to go into the buſineſs with a degree of underſtanding ſuited to its importance. But taking the matter up at that time and manner was an expreſs violation of the exiſting confederation, for it is now well known, that Congreſs did not tranſmit the new conſtitution to this ſtate, until the week after the laſt houſe finally roſe, and that it was not officially before the legiſlature, until after the preſent houſe met. In this ſituation, we who were of the minority ſaw no alternative, but either by our preſence to aſſiſt in breaking the conſtitution of this ſtate, and the confederation of the United States, or elſe to avail ourſelves of that negative check, which the conſtitution itſelf hath inſtituted, by conſtituting a large quorum, and ſecured the exerciſe of, by preventing the doors from being ſhut.

If the conſtitution had not pointed out ſuch an alternative, or if the minority had not thought proper to make uſe of it, neceſſity dictated the meaſure, for before the buſineſs was brought forward, and before many of us knew any ſuch matter was deſigned, the gallery and doors were ſo unuſually crouded as to give ground of ſurpriſe, though we had no ſuſpicion of the deſign until the extraordinary reſolution was offered, and the ſtill more extraordinary language that was uſed to ſupport it, viz. "That the citizens who had declined to ſign an "approbation of the new plan would ſhortly be "dragged forth with public infamy and diſgrace; "That none would dare to oppoſe it: That the "confederation was diſſolved and rotten, and did "not exiſt, &c." I was by that time fully convinced that we were ſurrounded with a mob, probably collected there for the occaſion by thoſe who being members of the houſe, had the addreſs to procure ſeats in the Fœderal Convention, and there having exceeded the powers delegated to them, were intoxicated with ſuch fondneſs for the creature of their own production, or perhaps for the enjoyment of thoſe offices which they had ſo liberally provided in the propoſed plan, as not only to break through the rules of decency and good order, but every obligation they were under to their conſtituents.

Under the full perſuaſion that we were acting under ſuch reſtraint as was inconſiſtent with the free exerciſe of legiſlative authority, and entirely ſubverſive of the powers with which we were entruſted; when the firſt paragraph of the plan was pretty largely debated and adopted, and the remaining paragraphs were before us, the houſe adjourned until the afternoon, which was the only inſtance of that ſeſſion in which we were to ſit twice in one day. I then determined in my own mind not to return to the houſe until I could do it with confidence of enjoying perſonal freedom, ſtedfaſtly believing that no law enacted under the evident reſtraint of a mob could be binding or admitted in a court of juſtice; but ſuch of us who had opportunity propoſed to the ſpeaker of the houſe, and to the member who moved that haſty buſineſs, for to return to the houſe and finiſh the buſineſs that was regularly brought before the houſe, upon thoſe gentlemen engaging that the new plan ſhould not be further urged until it would come officially and orderly before them, but this was refuſed; and it is now notorious, that upon the next day after the reſolution was introduced, the mob, after rendezvouſing at the ſtate houſe, marched to and entered by force the lodging of ſome of the members, and carried off two of them (which was all that fell into their hands) unto the aſſembly room, then become the guard houſe of the mob, and after putting them into it kept them there; and when under this reſtraint they aſſumed the form of a legiſlative aſſembly, and counting upon the impriſoned members as a neceſſary part of their number, proceeded to complete the reſolutions, but with ſome alteration, for they did not then dare to give ſo ſhort a day for the election as on the preceeding day, and they added an idea to delude the people, as if the propoſed plan of government had been tranſmitted to the houſe from Congreſs; but this I have already noticed, and it is now univerſally known to be true, whilſt proceeding on this buſineſs the two members who were forced there by the mob were not only under reſtraint, but one of them prevented from his freedom of going even to the door, by one who was both a member of the late Fœderal Convention and of the aſſembly, laying forcible hands upon him, and by the mob cry ſtop, ſtop, &c. and during thoſe tranſactions ſo far was the diſcipline of the houſe from being exerted, that there was not even a call to order by the ſpeaker.

Thus it appears that the diſſenting members only availed themſelves of this conſtitutional negative in a caſe where the conſtitution itſelf and the confederation were both at ſtake, as well as the peoples right to information in a caſe wherein they are to judge for themſelves and poſterity. The magnitude of the caſe invited, and forcible neceſſity drove them to appeal to their conſtituents, who have already given an uncontrovertable deciſion in favor of our conduct by re-electing all thoſe members who diſſented that had not already ſerved four years in the houſe, except one man who was left out thro' a miſtaken diviſion of votes, occaſioned by a recent erection of a county. Thus the people have given the ſtrongeſt teſtimony of their approbation which the caſe admits of.

It is the glory of the American revolution that the reſpective governments underwent a free and rational diſcuſſion, were the fruit of deliberation and choice, and were not dictated by a chieftain, nor hatched in a ſecret conclave, where the depraved and intrigueing generally overreach and circumvent the diſintereſted and virtuous: they were alſo generally left open to a regular courſe of alteration or amendment, according as experience and circumſtances dictate the propriety. But who would then have believed that at this early period within the remembrance, and even when the feelings of the revolution were yet freſh on every ſenſible patriotic mind, that an attempt ſhould be made in a legiſlative body to preclude the people who accompliſhed the revolution, and whoſe wounds have yet ſcarcely ceaſed to bleed, from the means of underſtanding and judging of the amendments or alterations by which they are to be bound. Future generations will juſtly cenſure thoſe who precipitated this buſineſs, when the dark deſigns and ambitious intrigues which have fomented the embarraſſments of the union, and paved the way for the ariſtocratic attempts of the preſent day ſhall be fully unfolded.

The worſt that even an improper exertion of this negative by a minority can do, is to poſtpone the buſineſs in queſtion, be it what it will, and ſo to give further time for adviſement.

But what will be the opinion of freemen of the precedent ſet by the majority of the late houſe, if a mob may be employed or countenanced in compelling members to attend and act who are neceſſarily reſponſible only to the rules of their own houſe and their conſtituents. May not the mob by the ſame rule, if they diſlike a buſineſs which is likely to be enacted into a law—take out what number of members they pleaſe ſo as to turn the majority to their wiſhes, or may they not by all the terrors of riot oblige the members to vote as they think fit. But the conſequences are too plain and too dreadful to be dwelt upon.

In ſome other free countries, mobs have had the audacity to interrupt the legiſlature, and prevent for a time, the progreſs of ſome buſineſs obnoxious to the populace, but it remained for the legiſlature of Pennſylvania to ſuffer, and for the mob of Philadelphia to commit that kind of outrage which puts an end to conſtitutional government, and the peace and confidence of ſociety at once, for who can think a deliberative body free in their deciſions, which ſits in reach of the operations and terrors of ſuch a ſet of deſperadoes.

One of the evils prevalent in the controverſies of the preſent times are, that the ſuppoſed merit or demerit of names are urged inſtead of reaſon, and detraction inſtead of argument.—For this cauſe I ſhall not at preſent give my real name, but ſubſcribe myſelf what I really have been,

One of the diſſenting Aſſembly Men.

BOSTON, Oct. 31.

A correſpondent remarks, that the ſame or ſimilar objections to thoſe raiſed againſt the new conſtitution, were offered againſt the confederation.—It was to be an irreverſible decree, like the laws of the Medes and Perſians. Experience has proved the fallacy of ſuch an idea, and thoſe who object to the American conſtitution upon this ſcore, do it in mere wantonneſs, or from calculating the tyrannical views of thoſe who may chance to govern us, by their own propenſities to domination and luſt of power.

Philadelphia, Nov. 14.

Friday laſt the following meſſage was read in the General Aſſembly:—

A Meſſage from the Preſident and the Supreme Executive Council to the General Aſſembly.

Since your reſolution of the 31ſt ult. was forwarded to Congreſs, Council have received information, that the members remaining at New-York were not ſufficient to form a repreſentation of the United States.

As the danger to the ſtate appears to be preſſing, and the permiſſion ſolicited from Congreſs cannot now be obtained—Council therefore recommend it to the General Aſſembly, to adopt effectual meaſures, for enforcing the laws of the ſtate in the county of Luzerne, which they are of opinion cannot be done without a permanent force.

The expulſion of the commiſſioners from Wyoming will occaſion a delay in the execution of their duty under the late law. Council therefore recommend that a further time be given for compleating the ſervices expected from them, under their preſent appointment.

The caſe of colonel Mentger ſubmitted to the committee of a former houſe, is recommended to the attention of the General Aſſembly, as he appears to have performed ſundry ſervices, for which he has received no compenſation.

The petition of captain Woolpper is herewith tranſmitted, as the powers of Council do not extend to his caſe.

Conſiderable deficiencies have ariſen in the collection of taxes, owing to the neglect of ſome of the magiſtrates, in not proſecuting delinquents, after returns are furniſhed to them by the collectors.

This abuſe, in the opinion of Council, merits the attention of the General Aſſembly, either in removing the magiſtrates guilty of ſuch neglect, or ſubjecting them to ſome penalty that may compel them to a faithful diſcharge of their duty.

Nov. 8, 1787. BENJAMIN FRANKLIN.

On motion and by ſpecial order the ſame was read a ſecond time.

Ordered, that that part of the meſſage relative to the diſturbances at Wyoming be referred to the committee on the Luzerne buſineſs.

Ordered, that part which reſpects the caſe of colonel Mentger be referred to the grand committee of claims.

Ordered, that what relates to Mr. Woolpper be referred to the ſame committee.

Ordered, that Meſſrs. Findley, Robinſon and M'Lene be a committee, on that part of the meſſage which relates to deviſing means for the better collection of the public revenues.

Philadelphia, Nov. 7, 1787.

Meſſrs. DUNLAP & CLAYPOOLE,

YOU will excuſe my recalling to your attention a circumſtance only intereſting to the public from the official relation in which I now ſtand to them.

About the beginning of the laſt ſeſſion of the late Aſſembly, a petition was preſented to the Houſe by Lewis Caſtleman, of Bedford county, ſtating, "That I had defrauded him of a tract of land within the ſaid county, by drawing from him a deed of conveyance, inſtead of a power of attorney." The fate of this petition was ſuch as it deſerved—it was diſmiſſed by the houſe, and Caſtleman, if injured, referred to the laws. What their operation would be, (were the charges farther proſecuted) I ſubmit to the opinion of the public, when they have read the following papers, No 1 and 2; theſe will ſhew at once the iniquity of the charge, the baſeneſs of the agent (a recorded murderer), and the ſtill greater baſeneſs of thoſe, who for the unworthy and miſerable purpoſes of a county election, could have ſet him on. I will make but one or two ſhort inferences from the whole.

1ſt, That my enemies have ſpared no induſtry nor artifice, nor ſtopped at any falſhood, to blacken and deſtroy my character—And,

2dly, That with all their induſtry, artifice and falſehood, they have been able only to exhibit one charge, eaſily refutable, and clearly refuted.

I am, Gentlemen, your moſt obedient ſervant,

G. WOODS.

KNOW all men by theſe preſents, That I Lewis Caſtleman, of Cumberland county, and province of Pennſylvania, yeoman, for and in conſideration of the ſum of twenty pounds, lawful money of the province aforeſaid, to me in hand paid, by George Woods of Bedford, the receipt whereof I do hereby acknowledge, have granted, bargained and ſold and by theſe preſents do grant, bargain and ſell all my right, title, intereſt, property, claim and demand, of, in and to a certain improvement and tract of land, ſituate on the ſouth ſide of Dunning's Creek, joining and below Richard Hockly's land, on the mouth of Bruſh Run, and above the ſettled plantation of John Fouts or John Holmes; together with all and ſingular my improvements thereon, to wit, a houſe of twenty by eighteen, one ſtory and an half high a ſmall field, cleared, fenced and tilled, and ſome meadow cleared and ſowed with timothy; ſaid improvements being made, in the years one thouſand, ſeven hundred, ſixty-one and two; all which improvements I in manner and form aforeſaid releaſe and for ever quit claim unto the ſaid George Woods, his heirs, executors, adminiſtrators and aſſigns, with all and every the emoluments and advantages that may accrue unto the ſaid Woods from ſaid improvements, or any part of them, but ſhall be deemed and taken, and are hereby declared to be to his the ſaid George Woods, his heirs and aſſigns, own proper uſe and behoof, without any let, ſuit, trouble, moleſtation or eviction of me the ſaid Lewis Caſtleman, my heirs, executors, adminiſtrators or aſſigns, or any perſon or perſons claiming or to claim, by, from or under me, or any of them, any thing herein contained to the contrary notwithſtanding.

In witneſs whereof I have hereunto ſet my hand and ſeal, this tenth day of May, one thouſand, ſeven hundred and ſixty-nine.

COUNTRY MADE ditto, from the American rock, of every uſual ſize, or any other that may be ordered, the beſt grit for merchant or country work, either to run together, or work with a French Burr or Cologne, ever yet experienced in this ſtate.

Warranted Boulting Cloths.

A very extenſive and compleat Aſſortment, lately imported from the manufactories, ſuitable to every branch of the boulting buſineſs; which are to be diſpoſed of at the ſame low rates as they were ſold before the revolution, at the ſtores abovementioned, or at ROBERT LEWIS's dwelling houſe in Spruce ſtreet, three doors from Third ſtreet. MILLERS and others may be furniſhed with cloths of ſuperior quality and texture to any we have hitherto known imported into America: thoſe who are unacquainted with this very difficult and precarious article, may rely on being ſupplied with ſuch cloths as will certainly anſwer their purpoſes; provided they attend to directions for affixing them on the reels, in the moſt advantageous manner to perform the work intended; which will ſave the trouble and expence of returning cloths of an inferior kind, which are frequently ſold in this and the neighbouring ſtates.

The SYMPATHISING TEAR.

LET all your boaſts of wealth and love
  Diſplay their various charms ſo dear;
A ſweeter pleaſure Friendſhip proves,
  That ſheds the ſympathiſing tear,

Let Strephon boaſt of Celia's charms,
  Her form, her ſweet enchanting leer;
But beauty dwells in Friendſhip's arms,
  That ſheds the ſympathiſing tear.

Let heroes boaſt of toils in wars,
  Of honors gain'd when death was near,
But Friendſhip's honor's not in ſcars,
  But in the ſympathiſing tear.

Tho' evils come, I'll ſcorn their darts,
  While I poſſeſs a friend ſo dear;
Who in my ſorrows takes his part,
  And ſheds the ſympathiſing tear.

ANECDOTE.

THE Ducheſs of Kingſton was always remarkable for having a very high ſenſe of her own dignity: Being one day detained in her carriage by a cart of coals that was unloading in a very narrow ſtreet, ſhe leant with both her arms upon the door, and aſked the fellow, "How dare you, ſirrah, to ſtop a woman of quality in the ſtreet?" "Woman of quality," (replied the man)—"Yes, fellow (rejoined her Grace) don't you ſee my arms upon my carriage?" "Yes, I do indeed, (he anſwered) and a pair of d——d coarſe arms they are."

☞ Take Notice.

WM. STROUD, Gaoler.

N. B. The above men ſay they came lately from Charleſton, South-Carolina, and are both blackſmiths; Loggo is a very big man, and Gregory a little man, and are now confined in the gaol of ſaid county, on ſuſpicion of having ſtolen ſaid creatures. Nov. 12

The two farms together contain 929 acres, but will be divided nearly equal. One half the land is cleared, the remainder in timber; about 60 acres of meadow made, and about as much more may be cleared, and a large proportion of the whole may be watered at a ſmall expence by ſeveral ſprings, and a conſiderable run, that flows through the centre of the land; the winter's run likewiſe flows through a part of it, on which is a mill ſeat. TWO very valuable and well-improved FARMS, late the property of Henry Wilson and Son, about two miles and a half from the Court-house, 24 miles from Baltimore, 9 miles from Joppa, and 8 miles from a landing at Otter-Point, near the Bay. The two farms together contain 929 acres, but will be divided nearly equal. There is on each farm a good brick house, with barn, stables, &c. a large orchard stocked with the best fruit, and a large garden paled in. The following was printed November 6, 1787, in the Trenton Weekly Mercury.

To the Citizens of New-Jerſey.

IN the hiſtory of the American revolution we ſhall find the preſent period more important to the citizens of this great republic than the awful and critical time of its declaration of independence. The latter opened the door by which our entrance into national importance was firſt made; it ſet us on an eminence in the view of the world; it put us on the liſt of competition with one of the moſt powerful nations of Europe, but it gave us only a chance for the eſtabliſhment of our freedom, as the iſſue of the conteſt was very uncertain. This now being gained, the moſt difficult and important taſk we have ſtill to go through; it remains for us to convince our enemies that the liberty and independence which we had enterprize and bravery enough to acquire, we have wiſdom and perſeverance to ſecure. If this be effectually done, we ſhall reap the benefit of our labours while we live, and poſterity will have cauſe to bleſs the memory of thoſe who raiſed and completed ſo noble and magnificent a ſtructure; but if the reverſe of this picture ſhould be forced upon the view of our citizens, how many and heavy would be the curſes of all good men upon our heads. Our recollection will immediately furniſh us with the hiſtory of a few facts—Our preſent governments were formed in the times of imminent danger and diſtreſs—The enemy was hovering round us, ready to attack us on whatever ſide there ſhould appear an opening; our legiſlators were ſometimes, during the very act of framing our conſtitutions, driven from their places of deliberating; but as we have been forced to that point, where we muſt throw from our ſhoulders the oppreſſive government of a tyrant, it became abſolutely neceſſary, that we ſhould immediately ſubſtitute another in its ſtead. Our preſſing neceſſities, if we expected to make a ſucceſsful oppoſition, pointed out to us, the aid of foreign powers: this could not be obtained while we called ourſelves ſubjects of Great-Britain, it was therefore indiſpenſibly neceſſary to declare ourſelves an independent nation. This was wiſely done, although we were not all aware of the great difficulties we had to encounter. Our national ſhip was launched into a wide ocean in the midſt of ſtorms, before ſhe was well equipped or had collected ſufficient materials for her voyage; ſhe has been toſſed and buffeted about for ſeveral years, and often times in the extremeſt danger; but at length, by her own ſtrength and the aid of thoſe who came to her relief, ſhe has been conducted ſafely into port. However on the inſpection and examination of our maſter builders, the timbers are found ſo disjointed and decayed, that it is believed ſhe cannot, without great riſk, bear a ſecond voyage, unleſs ſhe undergoes the moſt thorough repairs.

It is not my intention now to conſider minutely either the defects of our preſent confederation, or particularly to obſerve upon that plan which has been lately offered to us by thoſe diſtinguiſhed patriots and faviours of our country. My daily avocations allow me not much time for the ſtudy of politics, I ſhall therefore throw together, in haſte, only a few general obſervations. I take it for granted, that ſcarce any thing new can be ſaid on this ſubject by way of inveſtigation, but I cannot keep ſtill the pulſations of my heart, nor reſtrain the deſire I feel of endeavouring to forward our ſpeedy progreſs to a government which promiſes fair, from its excellent ingredients, to compoſe a moſt valuable and durable cement to the different ſtates of the union; to eſtabliſh a ſteady ſyſtem of juſtice and good faith among ourſelves, and to give us reſpectability and credit among the nations of the earth.

The great advantages which would be the reſult of the adoption of the propoſed conſtitution, would be almoſt innumerable. I will mention a few among the many—In the firſt place, the proper regulation of our commerce would be enſured; the impoſts on all foreign merchandize, imported into America, would ſtill effectually aid our continental treaſury. This power has been heretofore held back by ſome ſtates on narrow and miſtaken principles: the amount of the duties ſince the peace, would probably by this time have nearly paid our national debt—by the proper regulation of our commerce, our own manufactures would be alſo much promoted and encouraged; heavy duties would diſcourage the conſumption of articles of foreign growth; this would induce us more to work up our raw materials and prevent European manufacturers from dragging them from us, in order to beſtow upon them their own labour, and a high price before they are returned into our hands: Agriculture and population will alſo find improvement and increaſe—Agriculture is natural to America, and will always ſerve as an encreaſing ſource of commerce, while the produce of our farms furniſhes ſo conſiderable a proportion of it. Induced by the goodly proſpects of a happy and durable government, by which life, religion, freedom and property would be well ſecured, America will teem with thoſe who will fly from the ſlavery, perſecution, tyranny and wars of Europe. The civil commotions of Holland will ſoon open a wide door to let her citizens and thoſe of Germany, into America. The trumpet of war has already ſounded in their ears, and we ſhall ſoon behold the induſtrious labourers of thoſe countries pouring into our ports and crowding into our cities.

Another good conſequence of the new conſtitution will be the power given to Congreſs ſolely of coining money. By this means there will be one general currency throughout the United States. The citizens of each ſtate will be well acquainted with the money of the others, which will give great facility and convenience to trade and all negociations in buſineſs. The creditor and debtor, though in different ſtates, will equally know the value of what each receives or pays; the ſtranger and the traveller will have no difficulty or embarraſſment on account of the difference of coins. However ſlender this tie may appear to ſome, I have no doubt but the ſameneſs of money in every ſtate, will have a powerful influence on our union.

Needleſs alarms and fears have been endeavoured to be excited, as well, no doubt, by our enemies and thoſe among us diſaffected to our cauſe, as by ſome who act from better principles. Let us take a very ſhort and ſummary view of the plan. The power of Congreſs to lay and collect taxes, duties, impoſts and exciſes, has been objected to—By whom are thoſe taxes to be laid? by the repreſentatives of the ſeveral ſtates in Congreſs. This is then in perfect conformity to that juſt maxim in free governments, "that taxation and repreſentation ſhould go hand in hand." To what purpoſe are theſe taxes to be applied? It is expreſſly preſcribed by the conſtitution, "To pay the debts and provide for the common defence and general welfare of the United States." What, would you ſaddle Congreſs with the burden and expence of providing for the common ſafety, and not give them the power of raiſing any money? This would be requiring impoſſibilities indeed. Congreſs will alſo have the power to raiſe and ſupport armies—What evil can reſult from this? Even ſuppoſing, although it is ſcarcely ſuppoſable, that the repreſentatives of the people, ſhould form deſigns of enſlaving their conſtituents, how is it poſſible they could effect their ſcheme? It is provided by the conſtitution, "That no appropriation of money to that uſe ſhall be for a longer term than two years." An army ſufficient for ſuch a purpoſe could not be raiſed in two years, much leſs could they complete the buſineſs in that time. Every two years the people may change their repreſentatives if they pleaſe; and they certainly would pleaſe to change thoſe who would act with ſo much baſeneſs and treachery. If the Preſident ſhould have ſuch deſigns without the concurrence of Congreſs, he might have the honor of commanding an army as long as they would ſtay with him, but it is not common for an army to remain long in the field without the proſpect of any pay. The power of the preſident of the United States will not be ſo great as many have repreſented. His conſent is not neceſſary in paſſing any law; if he diſapproves, he has only a right to ſtate his objections, but if two-thirds of both houſes do not join with him, it will be a law notwithſtanding. He is to be commander in chief, and ſhall take care that the laws be faithfully executed. It will be readily agreed, that it would be highly ridiculous to ſend repreſentatives, and be at the expence of maintaining them, to make laws for us, if we did not give power to ſome perſon or perſons to ſee them duly executed: the wiſdom and prudence is to be ſhewn in the framing laws; the complete execution of them ought to follow of courſe.

The preſident, together with the ſenate, may appoint the officers of the United States. We find in practice, that, generally ſpeaking, perſons beſt qualified are appointed to offices, where the number who appoint, are few. They feel their reſponſibility to the public to be more immediate and certain, for if the appointment be wrong and the object of it unworthy, the cenſure can be eaſily fixed, the conſequence will be, a greater care and circumſpection in the choice. This we clearly ſaw, at times, during the late war, when the new modelling of our army became abſolutely neceſſary, the appointment of our officers was given ſolely to our worthy general—He alone became reſponſible, the conſequences were important and happy for America.

The power of the preſident is ſtill guarded further by the oath which he is bound to take before he enters on the execution of his office, where he ſwears that he will to the beſt of his ability preſerve, protect and defend the conſtitution of the United States. It is alſo ſaid by ſome of the oppoſers of the new plan of government, that in the perſon of the preſident, it verges to a monarchy—by others it is ſaid, that it approaches to an ariſtocracy thro' the ſenate. The ſenators are to be alſo bound by an oath or affirmation to ſupport the conſtitution: and though their appointments will be for ſix years, yet the rotation of the new choice of one third of them every ſecond year not only provides for experience in buſineſs by thoſe who remain, but alſo againſt any evil ſchemes which require time and extenſive connexions.——As to the danger of our ſtate governments being annihilated, the fourth ſection of the fourth article declares that "the United States ſhall guarrantee to every ſtate in the union a republican form of government."

Thus every guard which can be reaſonably required, ſeems to be made againſt improper encroachments.—Now let me aſk what will be the probable conſequences of not adopting the propoſed conſtitution?—with reſpect to ourſelves in the firſt place, ſcenes of injuſtice between man and man may diſcloſe themſelves, contracts may be broken, and the means of redreſs poſſibly not in the power of our legiſlatures, notwithſtanding their beſt intentions—beſides there are greater difficulties than many people imagine in procuring national movements; and the probability is, that all the ſtates would not be forward again in coming into ſuch a meaſure ſpeedily as forming another federal convention—— The fatigue and diſguſt of our celebrated ſtateſmen who have lately gone through four months labour of inveſtigation, would alſo tend to prevent the attempt—Theſe were men of acknowledged abilities and diſintereſted patriotiſm—If the reſult of their deliberations is not attended to, who will undertake again the arduous taſk? The ſame difference of intereſts, in different ſtates, will remain, but the ſame friendlineſs and wiſh for compromiſe and accommodation will not exiſt, after repeated vexatious trials and diſappointments.

Let us alſo recollect our ſituation with reſpect to foreign powers. Some of them have lent Congreſs money during the late war. Can Congreſs enſure the payment of either principal or intereſt? They may require but not enforce—they may aſk, but if denied or neglected, there is no effectual remedy. Can this be called an efficient government? No,—this part of it is laughed at by all Europe. But will theſe powers only laugh at our folly. They will in a ſhort time do ſomething more diſagreeable to us—they will do juſtice to themſelves by ſeizing our merchants ſhips and making repriſals on our property. Well but, ſay they who are more ſucceſsful in alarming and raiſing objections than in propoſing better conſtitutions——would you have us adopt this without making alterations, when there are ſeveral things in it which had better be mended? Yes, I would—and for the following reaſons.

Which ſtate convention will undertake to mend it? Is it probable that any one ſtate would ſooner hit upon what ſhould be for the general good of the union, than the late federal convention, which was compoſed of repreſentatives from every ſtate? And if it was not for the benefit of the United States in general, but only of the individual ſtate who propoſed it, would it not in the firſt place immediately open a wide door for each ſtate to propoſe many amendments which might be calculated only for the advancement of local intereſt? and in the next place, is it probable that a future convention (which at this rate would be neceſſary) would agree on better ground for the whole, than the late one? No, it would be idle to ſuppoſe it. It would ſerve but to procraſtinate a delivery from our preſent diſtreſſes, and tend very much by exciting diſſentions and quarrels, to our total diſſolution as a nation. Although I drew my firſt breath in New-Jerſey, and have continued in it during my life, firmly attached to its local intereſt, yet when I conſider the impoſſibility of its exiſtence at preſent, as a ſovereign ſtate without a union with others, I wiſh to feel myſelf more a citizen of the United States than of New-Jerſey alone. Our advancement and proſperity, nay, our very exiſtance as a nation depends on our union, that union muſt have for its foundation the good of the whole collectively conſidered. This, I think, is effectually done in the new conſtitution.

In pourtraying this plan, the collective intereſt is ſo mixed and blended in the general picture of the union, that happily the individual ſtates are only diſtinguiſhed as branches of that general family, without the whole of which, the painting would be incomplete.

In many publications againſt the propoſed ſyſtem the writers argue on the preſumption that Congreſs will ſet themſelves up againſt the liberties of their country.—Their proceedings will not be ſecret—their journals are ordered in this very conſtitution to be publiſhed, from time to time, for the inſpection of all: of whom will that body be compoſed? Of a ſenate, who are to be appointed by the legiſlatures, who will be choſen by the people, and of a houſe of repreſentatives alſo choſen by the people: if either act wrong, they would doubtleſs be left out in their next choice.

While virtue and patriotiſm remain in the people, it will always, with due care, be found in the repreſentatives: when the fountain is pure, the ſtreams that iſſue from it muſt be clear.

It is high time to ſhake off unmanly fears and ſneaking jealouſies——You have my countrymen, long been ſenſible of the inſufficiency of our preſent government. You have ſent your beſt and ableſt friends to form another—after four months cloſe application, they have completed that which they now offer. Make a fair experiment. Further alterations are provided for when neceſſary. Think ſeriouſly and act like men.

A Jerſeyman.

November 5, 1787.

FROM THE NEWPORT HERALD.

A Performance which aims at aboliſhing a ridiculous faſhion, or preventing the miſapplication of a uſeful production is entitled at leaſt to the candor of the public.

I read with pleaſure a paragraph in the Herald of the 11th of this month under the London head, which gives an account that the ladies there are again falling into the ſhapes which nature gave them—that broad-hoops, bell-hoops, high heads and low heads have all had their day; but the genuine figure is now reſtored.

I hope that the fair of this town will follow the example of their ſex in that large and polite city—no longer diſguiſe their beautiful forms with hoops or buſtlers, nor divert our attention from the ſymmetry of their features, and the carnation of their complexions, by enormous hats bedizen'd with a profuſion of ribbons and feathers.

As large hats and hoops are gone out of faſhion in London, experience induces us to expect that they will ſoon go out of faſhion here, and therefore I ſhall ſay no more on thoſe parts of female dreſs; but confine myſelf in this ſheet to a part of it which is not mentioned in the paragraph referred to; but which has a much worſe effect upon the ſhape than broad-hoops or bell hoops—I mean the buſtler:—And I would beg the candid attention of my female readers to the arguments I ſhall advance againſt that prepoſterous habiliment. Theſe arguments will be principally deduced from that humanity, benevolence, and compaſſion which are congenial with their nature, and from that pride a portion of which has fallen to the ſhare of every daughter as well as ſon of Adam.

Human nature is ſuch, that no one is poſſeſſed of a corporeal endowment, without being in ſome degree proud of it, and next to, if not before a fine face, is an elegant, graceful form.

How deeply the latter is injured by the buſtler every one muſt perceive who traces Hogarth's line of beauty as it is exhibited and illuſtrated in the beautiful figure of the young ladies of this town when they are habited in a ſuitable dreſs, and compares the regular curve that terminates the waiſt, with the ſudden, angular prominence occaſioned by the buſtler. A retroſpective view of themſelves when rigged out with this woollen bolſter, would, methinks, in ſpite of faſhion, be ſufficient to induce the fair to throw it aſide. But a dread of that almoſt invincible controuler of dreſs will not permit me to reſt the matter here; for that imperious miſtreſs, Faſhion, too frequently conſtrains us to ſubmit to the groſſeſt abſurdities; and arguments drawn from the tender feelings of the female heart, appear to me to be the moſt powerful.

The ſheep's wool that grows in this ſtate is, I believe, not ſufficient for ſtockings for its inhabitants; what then muſt be the wretched ſituation particularly of the poor of this town the approaching winter, when the wool which might cover the legs of hundreds is diverted from that uſe, and manufactured into odious buſtlers!!!

If any female, attached to this ridiculous article of dreſs, ſhould imagine that the quantity of wool expended in its manufacture, is too ſmall to merit conſideration, I would deſire her to attend but a moment to the following moderate calculation, and I am ſure ſhe will be convinced that the wool ſo expended, would cloath the legs of many hundreds.

An ingenious good-hearted female acquaintance informs me, that there are at leaſt ſix hundred buſtlers worn in this town, and that I ſhall not be extravagant if I ſhould count upon half a pound of wool for each of them. Now reckoning the ſame quantity of that article to a pair of ſtockings, which ſhe ſays will be about the average weight if childrens ſtockings are taken into the calculation, the wool worſe than waſted in buſtlers, would protect the legs of ſix hundred perſons from the inclemency of the coming winter.

Let any female reflect upon the numbers of grown perſons as well as children of both ſexes, who in the winter ſeaſon may be ſeen ſhivering in our ſtreets without ſtockings to cover their limbs purple with cold—let her conſider the wool in her buſtler would ſcreen the limbs of one of them, and then let her wear it if ſhe can. Female ſoftneſs and pity could not ſuſtain the painful reflection.—The buſtler muſt yield to the feelings of humanity.

But beſide theſe arguments—beſide the conſideration that the buſtler injures the female form, and robs the poor of a partial covering—is it not injurious to the conſtitution? A phyſician, on whoſe ſkill I can rely, informs me that the unnatural heat excited by this cincture of wool muſt, in his opinion, be productive of pernicious conſequences.

For my part, if this abominable practice ſhould be continued and become general through the ſtate, I ſhall deſpair of our ever having more than one repreſentative in Congreſs under the propoſed conſtitution; which in my opinion is, and I truſt will be in the opinion of the fair, a collateral argument againſt buſtlers, of no inconſiderable weight.

While I am inveighing againſt this abſurd part of dreſs, I would not forget the aged matron, nor the antiquated virgin. The firſt ſeems to have ſome claim to the comforts of, if any are connected with this broad, thick, woollen girdle, and the laſt ought not to be denied them, provided ſhe will plead her frigidity in her favour; but this reaſon cannot, and I am ſure will not be urged by the numerous majority of thoſe who wear them. Theſe are girls in all the glow, the plumpneſs, and elaſticity of health. To theſe my arguments are addreſſed; and may I not conclude that they will attend to their kindly feelings for the diſtreſſed part of their ſpecies—pay a ſuitable regard to the exact ſymmetry with which nature has endowed their beautiful forms, and to the preſervation of their conſtitutions; and without delay renounce, and diſcard the ridiculous, deforming, and may I not add, inhuman buſtler.

If any of my fair readers ſhould wiſh to know how the buſtler came into vogue, they are hereby informed, that in the fall of the year 1783, the Ducheſs of Buſtledorſe, a German lady, paid a viſit to the city of London, in Great Britain—that the redundant protuberancy of a part of her figure, ſtruck and engaged the attention of the ladies of the court—that from their fondneſs of imitation, and perhaps from political views, they put the invention of their mantua-makers to the torture to diſcover ſome habiliment, that would impart to them a jutting magnificence ſimilar to that of the Ducheſs. The woollen bolſter, on which I have been remarking, was at length concluded upon, and to this circumſtance the buſtler owes its introduction into Britain and its name. Its paſſage to, and its adoption in America, will find an eaſy key in that ſtrange cupidity for foreign faſhions, for which the ladies of this country are remarkable.

Upon the departure of the Ducheſs from London, the buſtler gradually leſſened, and is now, it is ſaid, entirely dropped in that metropolis. If this ſhould be the caſe there, it will, perhaps, have as great a tendency to throw this diſgraceful appendage out of faſhion here, as any thing or all the things I have ſaid againſt it. However, I ſhall think my labour well rewarded, if I ſhould find that I had in any meaſure contributed to the reſtoration, or rather the developement of the beautiful forms of the fair, or procured a ſtocking for the poor.

EXETER, (N. H.) Oct. 27.

On Sunday night laſt, Mrs. Cram, wife to Mr. —— Cram, of Deerfield, was ſafely delivered of three female children, who weighed on an average better than eight pound a piece: They are all living and likely to do well.

NEWBURY-PORT, Oct. 31.

Laſt Wedneſday col. Croſs's regiment was reviewed at Ameſbury, by gen. Titcomb. They made a very martial appearance, and performed a number of evolutions and firings, in a manner which did honor to both officers and ſoldiers, and was highly agreeable to a numerous concourſe of ſpectators.

BOSTON, Nov. 2.

The hon. ſenate, we hear, has paſſed a reſolve, by which the bounty given on whale oil, will ceaſe, after the 1ſt December next.

The queſtion whether a bridge ſhould be erected acroſs Beverly Ferry, was, on Wedneſday laſt, debated in the houſe of repreſentatives. The debates were not finiſhed till laſt evening, in the courſe of which,

Each party ſtrove, with eloquence and might,
To ſet their ſtatements in the faireſt light;
Exhauſted wit at length withdrew aſide,
And left the houſe the ſubject to decide:
The houſe divided—and it then appear'd,
No bridge acroſs the Ferry ſhould be rear'd!
O! Mighty! Mighty!

It is notorious, ſays a correſpondent, that ſcarcely a coaſter from Connecticut arrives, but vaſt numbers of the coppers of that ſtate are introduced, in no leſs quantity than by the caſk, into this town. That our citizens may be benefited by this hint, they are informed, on authority not to be doubted, that the copper coin of this commonwealth, ſtruck by order of the general court, will in a very few days, be in circulation, when, after that time, the coinage of any other ſtate, with the baſe metal imported from Birmingham, will not be a currency among us.

NEW-LONDON, Oct. 26.

So evident are the traces of wiſdom and ſound judgment in the conſtitution lately formed by ſome of the beſt characters in the United States, that, ſays a correſpondent, I cannot avoid anticipating our future happineſs ſhould it be adopted. It will ſet all the ſprings of action in motion. The government will be able to counteract all the oppreſſive acts of other nations reſpecting our trade, our own ſhips and ſeamen will be employed in exporting our own produce. This will revive ſhip-building; and we may ſoon expect to ſee our rivers lined as heretofore with new ſhips; this gives employment to carpenters, joiners, blackſmiths, and even to every ſpecies of tradeſmen; and not only ſo, but timber and lumber of every kind, as well as every other produce of the country will find a free vent; and to which I may add this happy and agreeable circumſtance, that we ſhall be one people, and governed by the ſame general laws from New Hampſhire to Georgia.

NEW-YORK, Oct. 3.

Tueſday laſt, agreeable to general orders, the regiment of militia, commanded by major Samuel Mansfield, and the independent company of artillery, commanded by capt. Daniel Gano, were reviewed by adjutant-gen. Fiſh.

After the review, the company of artillery, in front of the regiment, performed ſeveral military manœuvres and firings with two field pieces. The military conduct of both officers and men, and their ſpirited exertions in equipping themſelves as artilleriſts, met the fulleſt approbation of the adjt. general, and the applauſe of all ranks of ſpectators.

RICHMOND, Nov. 3.

In lieu of cards, a ſociety of gentlemen propoſing to themſelves the more rational amuſement, of diſcuſſing ſubjects of entertainment or erudition—the following queſtions are offered for inveſtigation, on Wedneſday evening next, at the large room in the Union Tavern, at which place it is propoſed to repeat a ſimilar entertainment every week.

1ſt. Whether will the encouragement of Agriculture or manufactures moſt conduce to the intereſt of Virginia?

2d. Has Civilization added to the real happineſs of mankind?

3d. What Paſſion of the Human Mind is moſt ungovernable?

The Preſident will be in the Chair at 6 o'clock.

ALEXANDRIA, Nov. 8.

On Thursday last came on the public examination of the several Schools in the Alexandria Academy, antecedent to the autumnal vacation; when the scholars in general acquitted themselves so as to answer fully the expectations of the visitors and trustees, and received the approbation and applause of such strangers and others as were present.

In the evening the pupils of the Reverend Mr. M'Whir delivered public orations before a large and respectable audience, among whom were present General Washington, and the greater part of the principal inhabitants, ladies and gentlemen, of this town and neighbourhood; After which prizes were delivered to such of the young gentlemen as were judged to have distinguished themselves most, for their scholarship, and for their merits as public speakers, in the following order, viz.

In the first class, which was examined as to proficiency of the scholars in Latin and Greek, and in modern geography, the pre-eminence was left by the examiners, undecided.

In the second, examined in Latin and ancient geography, George Washington and Charles Alexander were deemed the best scholars, and Robert Hartshorne adjudged to come very near them, and to be entitled to some distinction in consideration of his minority in years.

In the third class William Hartshorne and Geo. W. Craik were adjudged the best scholars, and on an equality.

In the fourth class, Jonathan Butcher the best scholar.

In the fifth class, Baldwin Stith, John Herbert, and Cuthbert Powell, the three best scholars, and on an equality.

In the sixth class, John Lowrey, the best scholar.

In the seventh class, Henry Fitzhugh.

In the grammarian class, Carlyle Whiting.

John M'Crea received a prize as the best writer, and also another prize as the best public speaker.

Samuel Baker, the second prize for public speaking.——Philip Baker, the third.—And John Herbert, the fourth.

It was also intended to allot a prize for the best reader of English, but the evening was so far advanced before the other exercises were concluded, that this was necessarily deferred for the present.—The number of pupils in the academy hath continued rather to increase since the last public examination.

Philadelphia, Nov. 15.

On Tuesday the honorable the General Assembly elected the following gentlemen delegates to Congress for the ensuing year, viz. William Irvine, Samuel Meredith, John Armstrong, William Bingham and James R. Reed.

It is said that the General Assembly will adjourn on Saturday next.

The order of the day for taking into consideration the vendue bill was on Tuesday last called up, but on motion of Mr. Kennedy, the bill was recommitted. The objections to passing it in its present form were chiefly, that it would be inconvenient and burthensome to individuals, without producing any advantage to the public—that it could only operate as an accommodation to the city, and therefore should be restricted in its operation—and that it would be nugatory to extend it into the counties, as no ready money vendues had ever been introduced there. Mr. Fitzsimons observed, that as a monopoly, the existing law was certainly wrong in its principle, and if it was to be the means of raising a revenue, it ought to be general, and not local. He therefore agreed to the re commitment, hoping that if the bill was confined to the city, the city only would be benefited by the money it produced.

Extract of a letter from Amsterdam, Sept 11, 1787.

"The political affairs of this country are now drawing to a crisis, as a memorial has been presented a few days ago by the Prussian ambassador, which will either cause a bloody war, or the contest must be given up in favor of the Prince of Orange. God grant our councellors wisdom, that they may take such resolutions as may ultimately prove the preservation and welfare of this country."

On Tuesday the 6th instant, the stated half yearly meeting of the New-Jersey Medical Society was held at the city of Burlington. The honorable Jonathan Elmer, M. D. was elected president of the society, Dr. Thomas Henderson secretary, and Doctors George W. Campbell, Archibald M'Calla, John Cooper, and Edward Taylor, were admitted members of the said society.

Messrs Printers,

This Monitory Epistle, addressed to a very Young Lady, may not be unpleasing to the Fair Sex in general. Your inserting it in your Paper will oblige a constant Reader.

SWEET, lovely girl! my best, my dearest care,
As Hebe blooming—and as Venus fair;
Thy tender years no artifice can know,
A heart like thine can fear no latent foe,
In ev'ry scene some smiling joy will rise,
And gayest prospects only glad thine eyes;
Delusive dreams as real forms appear,
And sanguine wishes silence ev'ry fear:
And innocence, that knows itself no guile,
Will see a friend in every specious smile,
Catch fond belief from ev'ry glozing tongue,
And paint delight for ever fair and young.
But know, my fair, a thousand snares surround,
And ev'ry step you tread is dang'rous ground;
From open foes and less from treach'rous friends,
E'en Prudence scarce her votaries defends!
And Prudence comes by sound advice alone:
Then learn to make these maxims all your own.
First, know, thy bloom will fade, those roses die;
And time obscure the brilliance of that eye;
Thy winning grace will lose its power to charm,
Thy smile to vanquish, and thy breast to warm;
The reign of beauty, like the blooming flower,
Is but the pride and pageant of an hour;
To day its sweets perfume the ambient air,
To-morrow sees it shrunk, nor longer fair:
Such the extent of all external sway;
At best, the glory of a short-liv'd day.
Then let the mind your noblest care engage;
Its beauties last beyond the flight of age:
The mental charms protract each dying grace,
And renovate the bloom that deck'd the beauteous face.——
Let ev'ry virtue reign within thy breast,
That Heav'n approves, or makes its owner blest:
To candour, truth, and charity divine,
The modest, decent, lovely virtues join.
Let wit, well-temper'd, meet with sense refin'd,
And ev'ry thought express the polish'd mind.
A mind above the meanness of deceit;
Of honor pure—in conscious virtue great;
In ev'ry change that keeps one steady aim,
And feels that joy and virtue are the same.
And O! let Prudence o'er each thought preside;
Direct in public, and in private guide;
Teach thee the snares of artifice to shun,
And know, not feel, how others were undone:
Teach thee to tell the flatt'rer from the friend,
And those who love from those who but pretend.
Ah! ne'er let flatt'ry tempt you to believe,
For man is false, and flatters to deceive:
Adores those charms his falshood would disdain,
And laughs at confidence he strives to gain.
And if delight your bosom e'er would taste,
O shun the vicious, dread the faithless breast!
Infection breathes where'er they take their way,
And weeping innocence becomes a prey:
The slightest blasts a female's bliss destroy,
And taint the source of all her sweetest joy;
Kill ev'ry blossom, over-run each flow'r,
And wrest from beauty all its charming pow'r:
The dying bud may burst to life again,
And herbs o'erspread the snow-invested plain;
Green leaves may cloathe the wint'ry widow'd trees,
And where frost nipt may fan the western breeze——
"But beauteous woman no redemption knows,
"The wounds of honor time can never close;"
Her virtue sunk, to light can never rise,
Nor lustre beam from once guilt-clouded eyes,
Fix'd be the mind those pleasures to pursue,
That reason points as permanent and true:
Think not that bliss can mingle with a throng,
Whirl'd by a tide of idle forms along:
Think not that pleasure lives with pomp and state,
Or soothes the bosoms of the rich and great:
Think not to meet her at the ball, the play,
Where flirt the frolicksome and haunt the gay:
Think not she flutters on the public walk,
Or prompts the tongue that pours unmeaning talk,
Or loves the breath of compliment to feel,
Or stamps on crowns her estimable seal.
True female pleasure, of more modest kind,
Springs from the heart, and lives within the mind;
From noisy mirth and grandeur's rout she flies,
And in domestic duties wholly lies.
As fades the flow'r that's rear'd with tender care,
When left expos'd to storms and chilling air,
So fades the fair in reason's sober eye,
That braves the crowd, nor heeds the danger nigh;
Who giddy roves with folly's motley queen,
Nor loves the transports of a life serene.
Be thine the friendship of a chosen few,
To ev'ry virtue uniformly true:
Be thine the converse of some kindred mind,
Candid to all, but not to errors blind:
Prudent to check or warn unguarded youth,
And guide thy steps in innocence and truth.
Those who regard, will fulsome language wave,
And, in the friend sincere, forget the slave:
Will make, like me, your happiness its care,
Nor wink at specks, that render you less fair.—
From books, too, draw much profit and delight,
At early morning, and at latest night:
But far, oh far! from thy chaste eyes remove
The bloated page that paints licentious love,
That wakes the passions, but not mends the heart,
And only leads to infamy and art!
Let Addison's and Johnson's moral page,
And Hawkesworth's pleasing stile thy hours engage:
From Milton feel the warm poetic fire,
Whom all the nymphs of Helicon inspire.
With Thomson round the varied seasons rove,
His chaste ideas ev'ry heart improve.
Let tuneful Pope instruct you how to sing,
To frame the lay, and raise the trembling wing.
Let deathless Shakespear, nature's fav'rite child,
Great above measure, and sublimely wild,
Of human manners give the picture true,
For ever changing, and for ever new.—
Such be thy joys—and through this varied life,
Whether a maid, a mother or a wife,
May fair content for ever fill thy breast,
And not an anxious care disturb thy rest:
May love, the purest passion of the skies,
Play round thy heart, and sparkle in thine eyes!
May all thy worth be virtue's sweet reward,
And goodness only claim thy just regard!
And when this busy scene of life is o'er,
And vain illusions vex the heart no more,
'Midst brightest saints O may I meet my dear,
And feel that love improv'd I cherish'd here!

ALBERTO.

From the New-York Journal.

Mr. Printer,

READING in your paper a few days ago some remarks on the present King of Prussia, and among his merits something upon his foibles, of which his attachment to the fair sex (a very laudable one I think) keeps the first place; and I was put in mind of an anecdote of the present King of Spain, which I wish to get a place in your paper, if you should think it deserving notice.

On Palm Sunday last year, after having gone thro' the ceremony of attending at mass in the royal chapel (which must be a very fatiguing one to a man turned of seventy, because during the whole ceremony, which lasts several hours, the people are obliged to stand) and visited La Iglesia de la Alocha; the king at dinner was told, that in a pond, at a place called La Casa del Campo, about one mile from Madrid, there were two snipes. The king, who had just got a mouthful, rose immediately from the table, and went directly to the place, where he killed one of the snipes, and afterwards returned, well satisfied with his sport. His majesty when young was very famous for his amorous sports, but in his more advanced years he has changed his passion for wounding to that of killing.

Yours, &c. GAETANO.

The SYMPATHIZING SIGH.

Written in Conſequence of ſome Verſes, inſerted in our Paper of Wedneſday laſt, entitled, " The Sympathizing Tear."

" SAY, what is Friendſhip, but a name,"
When friend can ne'er on friend rely?
'Tis chaos, built on airy frame,
That wants the Sympathizing Sigh!

I hate the fiend, whoſe vaulted praiſe
Can proffer all,—yet all deny;
Whoſe deeds diſſimulation ſways,
And feigns the Sympathizing Sigh.

But he who ſcorns the mean deceit,
And ſheds a tear, when Sorrow's by;
His friendſhip is ſupremely ſweet,
And ſweet's the Sympathizing Sigh.

I love the noble minded girl,
Whoſe boſom heaves—yet knows not why!
Whoſe pride ne'er checks the downy ſwell,
Nor ſtems the Sympathizing Sigh.

Like you, my friend, I hate the love
That ſpurns diſtreſs—when mis'ry's near;
Whoſe torpid views can ſoar above
The humble Sympathizing Tear.

And ſhould my friend and fair one vie,
Who moſt deſpondency could cheer!
From him I claim the friendly ſigh—
From her, the Sympathizing Tear.

No greater treaſures, world, I crave,
Should Heav'n my wiſhes thus ſupply,
To ev'ry tear which friendſhip gave,
To add the Sympathizing Sigh.

BOSTON, Nov. 5.

The following letter, containing the objections of the Hon. ELDRIDGE GERRY, Eſq. againſt his ſigning the national conſtitution, we lay before our readers for their ſerious peruſal.

New-York, 18*th October*, 1787.

Gentlemen,

I HAVE the honor to incloſe, purſuant to my commiſſion, the conſtitution propoſed by the Fœderal Convention.

To this ſyſtem I gave my diſſent, and ſhall ſubmit my objections to the honorable legiſlature.

It was painful for me, on a ſubject of ſuch national importance, to differ from the reſpectable members who ſigned the conſtitution: But conceiving as I did, that the liberties of America were not ſecured by the ſyſtem, it was my duty to oppoſe it.—

My principal objections to the plan, are, that there is no adequate proviſion for a repreſentation of the people—that they have no ſecurity for the right of election—that ſome of the powers of the legiſlature are ambiguous, and others indefinite and dangerous—that the executive is blended with and will have an undue influence over the legiſlature—that the judicial department will be oppreſſive—that treaties of the higheſt importance may be formed by the preſident with the advice of two thirds of a quorum of the ſenate—and that the ſyſtem is without the ſecurity of a bill of rights. Theſe are objections which are not local, but apply equally to all the ſtates.

As the convention was called for " the ſole and ' expreſs purpoſe of reviſing the articles of confede- ' ration, and reporting to Congreſs and the ſeveral ' legiſlatures ſuch alterations and proviſions as ſhall ' render the fœderal conſtitution adequate to the ' exigencies of government and the preſervation of ' the union," I did not conceive that theſe powers extend to the formation of the plan propoſed, but the convention being of a different opinion, I acquieſced in it, being fully convinced that to preſerve the union, an efficient government was indiſpenſibly neceſſary; and that it would be difficult to make proper amendments to the articles of confederation.

The conſtitution propoſed has few, if any fœderal features, but is rather a ſyſtem of national government: Nevertheleſs, in many reſpects I think it has great merit, and by proper amendments, may be adapted to the " exigencies of government and preſervation of liberty."

The queſtion on this plan involves others of the higheſt importance—1ſt, Whether there ſhall be a diſſolution of the fœderal government? 2dly. Whether the ſeveral ſtate governments ſhall be ſo altered, as in effect to be diſſolved? 3dly. Whether in lieu of the fœderal and ſtate governments, the national conſtitution now propoſed ſhall be ſubſtituted without amendment? Never perhaps were a people called on to decide a queſtion of greater magnitude—ſhould the citizens of America adopt the plan as it now ſtands, their liberties may be loſt: Or ſhould they reject it altogether, anarchy may enſue. It is evident therefore, that they ſhould not be precipitate in their deciſions; that the ſubject ſhould be well underſtood, leſt they ſhould refuſe to ſupport the government, after having haſtily accepted it.

If thoſe who are in favor of the conſtitution, as well as thoſe who are againſt it, ſhould preſerve moderation, their diſcuſſions may afford much information and finally direct to an happy iſſue.

It may be urged by ſome that an implicit confidence ſhould be placed in the convention; but however reſpectable the members may be who ſigned the conſtitution, it muſt be admitted, that a free people are the proper guardians of their rights and liberties—that the greateſt men may err—and that their errors are ſometimes of the greateſt magnitude.

Others may ſuppoſe, that the conſtitution may be ſafely adopted, becauſe therein proviſion is made to amend it: But cannot this object be better attained before a ratification, than after it? And ſhould a free people adopt a form of government, under conviction that it wants amendment?

And ſome may conceive, that if the plan is not accepted by the people, they will not unite in another: But ſurely whilſt they have the power to amend, they are not under the neceſſity of rejecting it.

I have been detained here longer than I expected, but ſhall leave this place in a day or two for Maſſachuſetts, and on my arrival ſhall ſubmit the reaſons (if required by the legiſlature) on which my objections are grounded.

I ſhall only add, that as the welfare of the union requires a better conſtitution than the confederation, I ſhall think it my duty as a citizen of Maſſachuſetts, to ſupport that which ſhall be finally adopted; ſincerely hoping it will ſecure the liberty and happineſs of America.

I have the honor to be, gentlemen, with the higheſt reſpect for the honorable legiſlature and yourſelves, your moſt obedient and very humble ſervant,

E. GERRY.

The Hon. Samuel Adams, Eſq;
Preſident of the Senate, and
The Hon. James Warren, Eſq;
Speaker of the Houſe of Repreſentatives of Maſſachuſetts.

For the BOSTON GAZETTE.

Meſſieurs EDES,

THE reaſons of the honorable Mr. Gerry for diſſenting from ſo very large and reſpectable a majority of the late Continental Convention have at leaſt reached the public eye; and now let every unprejudiced patriotic mind determine—Whether it is poſſible to conceive that thirty-nine members out of forty-two, which was the whole number of the convention, would have affixed their ſignatures to a conſtitution by which themſelves and poſterity were to be governed in all generations, ſo eſſentially defective as this gentleman's letter ſuggeſts? No, it cannot be; and I truſt the good ſenſe of the people of this commonwealth will induce them to give the above idea its full weight and importance, for it is as true as it is ancient, that " in a multitude of counſellors there is ſafety"——and to ſuffer ourſelves to be influenced upon this momentous ſubject by the opinion of an individual in oppoſition to ſo large a majority of enlightened, diſtinguiſhed, and decided patriots, will be ſacrificing the rights of the people, by adopting the wiſhes of perhaps an intereſted minority, inſtead of the determination of thoſe whoſe opinion ought upon every republican principle to predominate, viz. the MAJORITY.

As juſtice to themſelves, and a decent regard to the public opinion, ſeem to require that the honorable members of the convention from this ſtate, who not only aſſented to, but ſigned the American conſtitution, ſhould publiſh their reaſons for ſo doing, it is expected that we ſhall ſhortly be favored with ſuch a communication—which will doubtleſs afford much ſatisfaction and information to the public.

A FEDERALIST.

HARTFORD, Nov. 5.

Extract of a letter from a gentleman in New Haven to his friend in this city, October 31.

" Mr. Edwards is appointed member of Congreſs in the room of Dr. Johnſon, who is ineligible. Yeſterday Eraſtus Wolcott, Jonathan Sturges and James Hillhouſe, Eſquires, reſigned their ſeats in Congreſs, and this morning the houſe being led to a choice of delegates in their ſtead, Jeremiah Wadſworth, John Cheſter, and Benjamin Huntington, Eſquires, were elected. The comptroller has alſo reſigned his office—No ſucceſſor is as yet appointed, though probably the public will not remain deſtitute of ſo beneficial an officer. The lower houſe have granted a tax of 8d. on the pound payable in all kinds of public ſecurities, as alſo another of 11d. payable as aforeſaid, by which you ſee all the former appropriations are broken up—theſe are both negatived in the upper houſe. Memorials of perſons praying to be liberated from debts, &c. and alſo a laudable quantity of petitions for new towns, compound the chief private buſineſs, which generally met with the fate ſo juſtly due them, of being negatived."

NEWPORT, Nov. 8.

Proceedings of Government.

ON Wedneſday the 31ſt of October, both houſes of aſſembly were formed, when the members of the lower houſe for this laſt half year took their ſeats, and re-elected their former Speaker and Clerk. No alteration of conſequence has been made in the new election; the ſame principles which have for almoſt two years diſtracted our ſtate, ſtill form the ruling characteriſtics of the majority.

A bill for prohibiting the ſlave trade preſented by the ſociety of Friends, was the firſt buſineſs which engaged the attention of the houſe. A motion was made to poſtpone the conſideration of it to the next ſeſſion, as the bill was new and of great importance; but this motion was over-ruled, and the bill paſſed by a very large majority. To the aſtoniſhment of the public, the leading paper money members ſtood forth in ſupport of the bill, reprobating the trade not only as inhuman, but as unjuſt, and againſt the principles of morality and religion. It was a pleaſing preſage to ſee the leading characters in a legiſlature advocating juſtice, morality, and religion, who for eighteen months paſt, had been the authors and patrons of iniquitous tender laws, whereby the widow, the orphan, and the helpleſs, have been ſtript of their all: how far this happy proſpect of reformation ſucceeded, will appear by the ſubſequent proceedings.

Private petitions employed the attention of the houſe until Friday noon, when a motion made at a former ſeſſion was renewed, for what is farcically called, a more equal repreſentation in the lower houſe of aſſembly, or in other words, to reduce the large towns to the number of the ſmalleſt—two members for each. A motion for referring it was negatived by a majority of one; it was afterwards agreed to, and on Thurſday of the next ſeſſion this important queſtion is to be decided.——What are charters? What are our rights? if an houſe of aſſembly can thus make innovations upon our government; as well might they reſolve that their offices ſhould be hereditary, and their powers indefinite.

A report on the public letters was now called for: the letter from Congreſs, and report of the Convention being read, Mr. Marchant, a member from Newport aroſe, and obſerved, that perhaps there never was a matter of more conſequence before the houſe; but ſtill as it was the people at large who were to determine this momentous queſtion, and the general aſſembly were the medium through which the people were to receive their report, he would not enter into the merits of the queſtion, nor anticipate the ſentiments the good people at large entertained of it, but wiſhed they might conſider it with coolneſs and deliberation; he therefore made a motion in writing, which was ſeconded by the members of Newport and Providence, for printing the propoſed Fœderal Conſtitution to be tranſmitted to the ſeveral towns, recommending them to appoint delegates to meet in convention to conſider and determine thereon, and forward the ſame to Congreſs, upon which a warm oppoſition took place, and the merits of the Conſtitution were largely entered into, and every ſuggeſtion made that might prejudice the minds of the people (too much prejudiced already) to any plan which does not quadrate with their darling privileges of making paper money; the weak and groundleſs ſuggeſtions of the majority were anſwered by the minority with manly truth and decided arguments, but all was in vain; upon the queſtion being put to agree with it, it was negatived by a great majority. However, to preſerve the appearance of fœderaliſm, the houſe ordered the report of the convention to be printed in handbills and ſent into the ſeveral towns, to inform them of what they had been long before fully adviſed of by its general publication.

At the former ſeſſions a very ſingular apologetical letter was ſent to Congreſs, giving reaſons for not ſending delegates the remainder of the laſt fœderal year; but aſſuring Congreſs that they had made proviſion to have their delegates forward on the new year which commenced the firſt Monday of this month. Commodore Whipple, a member from Cranſton, called upon the houſe to perform their promiſe, he truſted they did not mean to ſacrifice all their national honor, and to make promiſes without the leaſt intention of performing them; he accordingly moved, That the delegates be ordered forward, and proviſion made for their ſupport, but the houſe declined acting thereon. It was alſo moved, that the requiſitions of Congreſs for the preſent year might be taken up, but the motion was not attended to.

A petition was preferred by a late collector of taxes, praying that his real eſtate which had been ſold and purchaſed by government, to ſatisfy the deficiency of a ſilver money tax which had been committed to him to collect, might be reſtored to him upon his paying into the treaſury the deficiency. It was urged with ſome warmth by ſome of the leading characters in the adminiſtration, that to grant the requeſt, would be doing great injuſtice to thoſe towns which had paid their proportion of the tax in ſpecie, that the paper money had depreciated, and was not now at par. This honeſt declaration gave great uneaſineſs to ſome other members more ſagacious, and they avoided taking any queſtion upon the petition by referring it to a committee, to aſcertain whether ſilver money had been collected by the collector, and referred the petition to the next ſeſſion.

At the laſt ſeſſion a vote paſſed the lower houſe, ordering all holders of 6 per cent. ſtate ſecurities to receive a ſecond quarter thereof, in the depreciated paper money, under penalty of forfeiture of the ſame: this vote the upper houſe did not then act upon; but at this ſeſſion they ſent down a vote directing the holders of them to receive the 1-4th part within two months, but upon failure, that the intereſt only ſhould ceaſe. Here was a new glimmering of a return of the bleſſings of good government, which for a long time had been baniſhed from our little ſtate; but the lower houſe were in a flame in a moment, non-concurred with it, and ſent a vote of a ſimilar complexion with all their paper money acts, ordering this ſecond quarter of the principal and intereſt forfeit, if the holders do not apply for the ſame within two months. The upper houſe with reluctance, and by a majority of one only, concurred with this extraordinary reſolution.

The ſeſſion was cloſed with grants to the waiters at ſix for one, and without repealing an act allowing the tender of it at par.

Thus fraud and injuſtice ſtill ſtalks through our land, and robs government of its brighteſt ornaments, and the honeſt part of the community of their hard earned pittance.

The aſſembly adjourned to the laſt Monday of February next, then to convene at Providence.

The following is a copy of a motion made at the laſt ſeſſion of our aſſembly, by Henry Marchant, Eſq; with the certificate of the clerk of the deciſion of the houſe thereon:

Moved,

" THAT copies of the doings of the late honorable Convention of Philadelphia, recommending a Conſtitution for the United States of America, be printed and ſent to the reſpective town clerks within this ſtate; that town meetings be directed to be called upon the day of next, then and there to appoint delegates in the ſame manner as they appoint members for the lower houſe of the general aſſembly for May and October ſeſſions:—That ſaid delegates meet in convention at on the day of ; that they then and there appoint a chairman and ſecretary, and proceed to take into conſideration the ſaid conſtitution ſo as above recommended, and to determine thereon as propoſed, and forward the reſult of their deliberations ſealed up and directed to the honorable the Congreſs of the United States."

In the lower houſe, November 3d, 1787.

This motion is rejected,

R. J. HELME, Clerk.

Philadelphia, Nov. 16.

Timothy Pickering, Eſq; is elected to repreſent the county of Luzerne, in the enſuing Convention of this ſtate.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY.

FRIDAY, November 9.

Mr. Lewis. I beg leave, Mr. Speaker, to preſent a memorial from the board of managers, appointed by the ſociety for encouraging manufactures and uſeful arts in this ſtate, in which thoſe gentlemen deſcribe the advantage that will reſult from a law rendering it highly penal to ſeduce artiſts to deſert the country, or to export ſuch models and machines as may promote the ſalutary objects of their inſtitution, and praying that a law may be enacted accordingly. The memorial being read by the clerk, was, by ſpecial order, taken up for a ſecond reading.

Mr. Fitzſimons. Sir, in order to evince the neceſſity of complying with the prayer of the memorial before us, I beg leave to advert to a fact of ſome notoriety, and which, I believe, is the ground of the preſent application. Two models of machines for ſpinning cotton, had been introduced into this ſtate, a ſhort time before the eſtabliſhment of the ſociety for encouraging manufactures, and they naturally attracted the attention of the officers of that inſtitution, who were deſirous to purchaſe them for the public benefit. But it ſeems that certain perſons, inimical to the manufacturing intereſts of our country, had previouſly obtained the property of theſe models, and effectually fruſtrated the patriotic intention of our infant ſociety, by conveying them into a foreign country. This diſappointment, however, would be of ſmall account, were there not reaſon to ſuſpect that it is only the firſt evidence of a ſcheme which has been laid, and ſupported by an ample ſubſcription, to counteract in this manner the eſtabliſhment of domeſtic factories. Since, therefore, the people have earneſtly embraced that object, and it is our duty, Mr. Speaker, to countenance and facilitate their exertions, by wiſe and efficient regulations, I move that this memorial be referred to a committee, who may deliberate upon the beſt means of ſuppreſſing the evil complained of, and of advancing the meritorious deſign of the new inſtitution.

The memorial was accordingly referred to a committee.

The committee on that part of the meſſage relating to the unaccountable depreciation of the paper money, reported, that it was neceſſary to deſtroy more than 20,000l. per annum, but that it could only be done conveniently, by preventing the reloan of money paid into the loan-office, and by empowering the truſtees to receive mortgage money before due—by which means the committee calculated that all the emiſſion, except 20,000l. would be cancelled in three years, and the reſidue in one year more, without interfering with appropriated monies. On motion, a committee was appointed to bring in a bill agreeably to the tenor of the report.

SATURDAY, November 10.

The houſe met purſuant to adjournment.

The order of the day for electing a ſtate treaſurer was called up, but Mr. M'Lean expreſſing a deſire to ſtate a ſubject of ſome importance, that order was poſtponed to give him an opportunity to addreſs the houſe, which he did in the following manner:

Mr. M'Lean. It is with the greateſt diffidence I riſe to repreſent ſome facts, which in my opinion, reſpect more the dignity and honor of this houſe, than the perſonal ſafety and reſentments of thoſe who are individually intereſted. As a member of the legiſlature, it is my duty to guard and protect its privileges in whatever form they may be attacked; and even Mr. Speaker, when ſo humble a member as he that now addreſſes you, has been made the means of offering an inſult to the houſe, the offence, which is but trivial when we conſider the man, becomes of great importance when we conſider his office. For theſe reaſons therefore, I think myſelf bound to lay before the houſe, the circumſtances of complaint to which I have alluded; but to their wiſdom I ſhall implicitly ſubmit the meaſures which are proper to be purſued upon the occaſion. About midnight on Tueſday laſt, a great concourſe of people aſſembled oppoſite to the houſe of Mr. Alexander Boyd, in which myſelf, ſeveral other members of this houſe, and ſeveral members of the ſupreme executive council lodged, and, at that time, had retired to our reſpective chambers. The perſons thus aſſembled made a conſiderable noiſe in the ſtreets, and at length aſſailed Mr. Boyd's houſe, beating loudly at the door, and breaking the windows, thro' which they threw ſome very large ſtones, &c. exclaiming repeatedly, ' here the damned raſcals live who do all the miſchief,' and uſing other words highly reproachful to the members of this houſe and of the executive council. What were the motives of the rioters for this conduct, I do not know, nor am I ſolicitous to enquire; but having ſtated theſe facts, I am confident every gentleman here is ready to expreſs his diſapprobation of proceedings, ſo groſsly in violation of the law of the land, and the eſtabliſhed privilege of this houſe.

Mr. Findley. Though I am aware, Mr. Speaker, that the fulleſt credit will be given to the information of the member who has juſt ſpoken, and that upon this ſubject no other evidence is neceſſary to ſupport his allegations, yet I have been ſolicitous to put the authenticity of the facts which have been ſtated beyond all doubt, and therefore beg leave to preſent two affidavits, one made by Mr. Boyd, whoſe houſe has been attacked, and the other by Mr. Baird, a member of the ſupreme executive council.

The clerk then read the affidavits, which were as follow:

Philadelphia, ſſ.

" On this ninth day of November, in the year of our Lord, one thouſand ſeven hundred and eighty ſeven, before me Plunket Fleeſon, Eſquire, being one of the juſtices of peace, in the city and county of Philadelphia, residing in the said city; cometh Alexander Boyd, of Sixth-street, from Delaware river in the said city, Esquire, who being solemnly sworn with uplifted hand, doth depose, testify and say, that on the night of Tuesday last, being the sixth of this present month of November, this deponent together with the honorable John Smilie, John Baird and Abraham Smith, members of the supreme executive council; and James M'Calmont, James M'Lean, John Piper and William Findley, Esquires, representatives in the general assembly of the state of Pennsylvania, who lodge with this deponent, were gone to bed in his dwelling in Sixth-street aforesaid: that this deponent was fallen asleep, when about 12 o'clock at midnight, a great noise in the adjoining street, awaked this deponent, who thereupon immediately jumped out of his bed, and raising the sash of a window towards the street of the third floor of the house, he saw a considerable number of men in the street, of whom twelve or fifteen were nigh to the door of this deponent's dwelling, and that divers of the persons, so as aforesaid assembled, did then and there speak reproachfully of the gentlemen who were lodged with this deponent, and did say that here is the house where the damned rascals lodge who do all the devilment, or words to the like effect; adding that they ought to be all hanged. That hearing the window rise and seeing this deponent, at the window, as this deponent believes, this deponent heard one of the same persons say, there is one of the damned rascals putting his head out of the window. That a man who lives nigh to this deponent, at this moment coming out of this dwelling, and approaching the mob aforesaid, the persons who composed the same, ran northerly towards Mulberry-street, and this deponent saw them no more. That this deponent was awaked as aforesaid, by the noise aforesaid, and by the throwing of large stones against the front door of his dwelling, some of which stones drove in the sash over the same door and fell in his entry, and one of them was at least ten pounds in weight. And that this deponent was not able to distinguish any of the aforesaid rioters, so as to know their names, or who they or any of them were. And further this deponent saith not."

Philadelphia ss.

"On this ninth day of November, anno domini, one thousand seven hundred and eighty seven, before me Plunket Fleeson, Esq; being one of the justices of the peace in and for the city and county of Philadelphia, and residing in the same city, cometh the honorable John Baird, who is one of the members of the supreme executive council of this commonwealth, and the said John, being duly sworn on the holy gospel, doth depose, testify and say, that he this deponent doth lodge with Alexander Boyd, and that being in bed at the dwelling of the said Alexander, in Sixth street from Delaware river, in the city of Philadelphia, on Tuesday night last, the 6th instant, and being fallen asleep, he was disturbed and awaked by a confused noise, at first seeming to him to be the report of guns fired, made by riotous persons in the street, at and near the same dwelling, and heard the glass of the lower story of the house breaking, by the throwing of stones against the same; that this deponent still lying in his bed and not rising, heard some persons in the street say "here the damned rascals live who do all the mischief," or words to like effect. That the disturbance aforesaid, did not continue after this deponent awaked, as aforesaid, above a minute, after which, this deponent heard the rioters aforesaid, departing hastily, as the sound of their feet indicated, towards Mulberry-street; and that the honorable John Smilie and Abraham Smith, together with James M'Calmont, James M'Lean, John Piper and William Findley, Esquires, representatives in the general assembly of this state, do also lodge with the said Alexander Boyd, and were all in bed, as this deponent hath good reason to believe, in the dwelling of the said Alexander, aforesaid, at the time of the outrage and riot so as aforesaid committed, and further saith not."

Mr. Kennedy. Sir, the outrage that has been committed against the public peace, and against the privilege of this house, being thus authenticated, I beg leave to offer a resolution upon the subject, in which I expect the unanimous concurrence of the members.

[The resolutition was prefaced with a recital of the injury stated in the depositions and complained of by the members, and concluded with authorising the executive council to offer a reward for the discovery of the offenders, and requiring them to direct the attorney general to prosecute the offenders when discovered.]

Mr. Peters. I am very ready, Mr. Speaker, to declare that the transaction represented to the house is of an unwarrantable and scandalous nature; for the punishment of which, I shall chearfully unite with the movers of this resolution. But I profess, sir, to be at a loss in what manner we ought to proceed in order to maintain the dignity of the legislature, and to give efficacy to our decisions upon this subject, which is certainly of great importance, not only as it respects the present object, but as it is to establish a precedent for the future. I wish therefore to have a short time for reflection, and move, that the resolution before us be referred to a committee—not Mr. Speaker to create unnecessary delay, but as I said before, to enable us to proceed with propriety and effect.

Mr. M'Lean. I do not perceive the least reason for referring this business to a committee: It is a plain, easy, and consistent proposition that lies before us, and the honor of the house requires that an explicit and immediate determination shall take place. The very reference to a committee will propagate an opinion that we are indifferent and in doubt as to the offence which has been committed, and it is probable that the executive council will have proceeded upon the complaint of their members, while we are indulging this useless spirit of procrastination. I cannot suppose that it is the wish of any member to defeat the question in this manner, and as it seems to be agreed, that the disapprobation of the house ought to be expressed, there can be no reason given for not expressing it at this time, since every objection either to the form or substance of the proposed resolution may be obviated by immediate alteration or amendment. It was with reluctance that I consented to delay calling the attention of the house to this business so long, but as any further delay, will I am confident be injurious to the legislative character, I shall oppose the motion for a commitment.

Mr. Lewis. It is difficult upon questions of importance suddenly to form an opinion which will be satisfactory to the mind; and therefore, though I shall never consent to sacrifice a moment to mere delay, I shall always be desirous to obtain the time that is necessary for deliberation. The subject before us is certainly of great moment, and therefore deserves consideration, but it is likewise of a complex nature, and therefore demands it. In the account which has been given to the house, we discover an offence that may either be considered as a riot and breach of the public peace, in which case the common course of the law is competent to punish the offenders, or it may be regarded as an infringement of the privilege of this house, in which case it becomes our duty to investigate the circumstances, for it is in our power alone to punish the delinquency. Connected with this distinction, are many enquiries which it is impossible to ascertain by an instantaneous recourse to the memory; and therefore I shall vote for the commitment, which is intended, I am confident, to provide the proper means of redressing the injury, and not to divert our attention from the complaint which has been made to the house.

Mr. Fitzsimons. I have taken a cursory view of the depositions, and in my opinion, Mr. Speaker, they do not support the resolution which has been offered to the house. I should certainly therefore, vote for the commitment upon that ground alone; but I conceive likewise, that in point of justice the legislature will not pass a vote which tends highly to reflect upon the city and its police, without a perfect investigation of the grounds on which they proceed. If the committee shall find the charge sufficiently supported, I shall concur in any proper measure for punishing the offenders; but to vindicate the conduct of the house, it is certainly necessary to enquire into the subject before we decide upon it.

Mr. Findley. Sir, I may be thought personally interested in the question, and therefore I shall not animadvert upon the means which the house ought to pursue in order to declare their disapprobation of the transaction complained of; but I beg leave to observe, that I hope no other proofs will be called for in this case, than could be called for in any other case of a similar nature. According to parliamentary usage, the complaint of a member, Mr. Speaker, need only be supported by his own assertion, and the affidavits which have been produced on this occasion, were superfluous and unnecessary. I claim no personal compliment or distinction, but possessing the honor of a seat in this house, I hope it will not be deemed arrogant or improper to claim the privileges and credit that belong to it.

Here the Speaker declared, that Mr. Findley was certainly right in his ideas upon the subject; and Mr. Fitzsimons observed, that not being present when the business was introduced, he did not know that it came in the form of a complaint from any member of the house.

After some further debate, the question for commitment was carried by a small majority.

The house then resumed the order of the day for chusing a state treasurer, when David Rittenhouse, Esq; was unanimously elected.

The bill for providing the allowance, &c. of the delegates to the ensuing convention, and the bill for raising the quota of troops of this state, were compared at the table, and enacted into laws.

By the President and the Supreme Executive Council of the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania,

A PROCLAMATION.

WHEREAS it appears to us, that about midnight, between Tuesday the sixth and Wednesday the seventh instant, a most daring Riot was committed by a large company of disorderly and evil minded persons unknown, at and on the dwelling of Major Alexander Boyd, in Sixth street, in the city of Philadelphia, which company violently assaulted the same house by throwing stones thereat and damaging the same, to the great disturbance and annoyance of the honorable John Baird, Abraham Smith, and John Smilie, members of Council, and of James M'Lene, James M'Calmont, William Findley and John Piper, esquires, members of the General Assembly of this commonwealth, who were there asleep within the same dwelling. AND WHEREAS it is manifest that the said rioters did perpetrate the riot and outrage aforesaid, with design to affront and injure the gentlemen aforesaid, in as much as they at the same time declared that they knew that they were lodgers with the said Alexander Boyd, and did speak concerning them in the most contumelious and threatening terms. AND WHEREAS the General Assembly of this state have transmitted to Council the following Resolutions entered into by them on this occasion, viz.

"Saturday, November 10th, 1787. The committee "to whom was referred, this forenoon, the motion "respecting the insult offered to some members of "this House, made report, which was read, and on "motion and by special order the same was read the "second time, and unanimously adopted, as follows, "viz. WHEREAS complaint hath been made to "this House by James M'Calmont, Jamee M'Lene, "John Piper and William Findley, esquires, members thereof, that on the night of Tuesday the sixth "instant, the house of major Boyd, of this city, in "which they resided, was riotously attacked by a "number of persons, to the said members unknown, "and themselves abused and insulted by reproachful "language.—RESOLVED, That such outrageous "proceedings is highly disapproved of by this House, "and is a breach of the privilege of its members.— "RESOLVED, That this resolution, together with "the affidavits which the said members have thought "proper to produce on the subject, be transmitted to "the Supreme Executive Council, and that Council "be requested to issue a proclamation, offering such "rewards as they may deem necessary for apprehending the perpetrators of the said outrage, in order "that they may be brought to punishment, and that "this House will provide for the payment of such "rewards."

AND WHEREAS it is highly proper that the authors of such high contempts, so inconsistent with the dignity and good order of government, and of the most pernicious example, should be immediately discovered and brought to condign punishment; WE DO, therefore, by this our Proclamation, offer and promise the reward of THREE HUNDRED DOLLARS for the discovery of the rioters aforesaid, so that they be duly convicted of the same offence, to be paid out of the public treasury of this commonwealth, to the person or persons who shall furnish the necessary information concerning the premises. And we do hereby charge and require all Judges, Justices, Sheriffs and Constables to make diligent search and enquiry after, and to use their utmost endeavours to apprehend and secure the said rioters, their aiders, abettors and comforters, so that they may be dealt with according to law.

GIVEN in Council, under the hand of the President, and the seal of the State, at Philadelphia, this twelfth day of November, in the Year of Our Lord one thousand seven hundred and eighty-seven.

Third ſtreet, below Market ſtreet, Octo. 4 f

Philadelphia, October 16, 1787.

For Griſt Mills & other Water Works

On an extenſive Plan,

One of the beſt ſituations in America is offered

F O R   S A L E,

Together With

Batſto Iron-Works,

At the forks of Little Egg-Harbour river, one of the moſt healthy ſpots in New Jerſey, 38 miles by land from Philadelphia, and within a few hours ſail of New York.

THE river, communicating with the ſea by the beſt inlet on the Jerſey coaſt, is navigable for veſſels of 200 tons within a few miles of the works; thoſe of 100 tons may approach within one mile; flats and ſcows, carrying 10 or 12 tons, load and unload at the works. The uſual freight to New York or Philadelphia is 10 ſhillings per ton. The furnace ſtream affords plenty of water, in the dryeſt ſeaſon, for 3 or 4 pair of mill ſtones, beſides ſupplying the iron works.——An excellent dam, which has been increaſing in ſtrength many years by the cinder from the furnace, is well ſecured from the danger of freſhes, and the works are ſcarcely ever injured or delayed by either ice or back-water, though the tide ſwells to the foot of the dam: mills may therefore be erected at a moderate expence. This being a part of the country in which many people and many teams are neceſſarily employed in collecting and preparing for market the iron and lumber with which it abounds, and at the ſame time illy adapted to the raiſing of grain for their ſupport, there is, and muſt continue to be, a demand for large quantities of midlings, cornell, ſhorts and bran, at advanced prices; and the conveniency of conveying flour at a light expence, either to New York or Philadelphia, or to more diſtant markets, will not be overlooked nor conſidered as of ſmall importance, eſpecially as there are few mill ſeats of any conſiderable capacity equally adapted to the New York market, which is not unfrequently ſupplied with ſuperfine flour from Philadelphia. A choice of the various kinds of wheat may be drawn to this ſeat from Virginia, Maryland, Delaware, New Jerſey, and New York with greater eaſe and convenience than to almoſt any other mills now in being.

The FURNACE, which by the extenſive lands annexed to it, is abundantly ſupplied with wood and ore, is now in blaſt, and is noted for producing the beſt hollow ware in America, the metal being peculiarly well adapted to the making of caſtings of all kinds, as well as excellent bar iron.

A FORGE, with four fires and two hammers, belongs to the eſtate, and ſtands about half a mile from the furnace, on another fine ſtream which affords plenty of water.

A SLITTING and ROLLING MILL, having been diſuſed for the laſt two or three years, may want ſome repairs to prepare it for uſe; but the fore-bays and gates are in perfect order, and being in the proper ſpot for griſt mills, may be appropriated to that uſe.

Two SAW MILLS in good order, and a ſmall Griſt Mill.

The MANSION HOUSE is elegantly ſituated about 100 yards from the furnace, on an height which commands a view of the whole works, and of the two villages formed by the ſurrounding buildings belonging to the eſtate, ſuch as barns, ſtables, coal houſes, work ſhops, ſtorehouſes and dwellings for work men. Adjoining the manſion houſe is a large and fruitful garden, affording plenty of vegetables, and well ſtored with choſen fruit trees; alſo a young bearing orchard, containing near 2000 apple trees, moſtly grafted.

Theſe excellent accommodations for extenſive and profitable manufactories, are offered to ſale at a very low rate, and on terms of payment calculated for the eaſe of the purchaſer, who may pay the greater part in the produce of the Iron Works, at a price to be agreed upon; and they are capable of producing more in one year, than will pay the whole price demanded.

For particulars, apply to WILLIAM RICHARDS, at the ſaid Works, JOHN COX, at Bloomſbury, near Trenton, or CHARLES PETTIT, in Philadelphia.

Valuable Land for Sale.

Will be exposed to Sale by Public Vendue, on Thursday the 29th of November next, at the Court-House in Harford county, state of Mryland,

TWO very valuable and well-improved FARMS, late the property of Henry Wilson and Son, about two miles and a half from the Court-house, 24 miles from Baltimore, 9 miles from Juppa, and 8 miles from a landing at Otter-Point, near the Bay. The two farms together contain 929 acres, but will be divided nearly equal. One half the land is cleared, the remainder in timber; about 60 acres of meadow made, and about as much more may be cleared, and a large proportion of the whole may be watered at a small expence by several springs, and a considerable run, that flows through the centre of the land; the Winter's run likewise flows through a part of it, on which is a mill seat. There is on each farm a good brick house, with barn, stables, &c. a large orchard stocked with the best fruit, and a large garden paled in. The situation is high and healthy, the soil good for either farming or grazing: they are convenient to several merchant mills, where there is a constant market for all kinds of grain.

Foreign Intelligence.

LONDON, July 19.

AS a ſample of Batavian wit (or Engliſh lying) we ſhall lay before our readers the creed the patriots put in the mouths of the partizans of the ſtadtholder:——

"I believe in Frederic William, the Mighty Lord of Great Eſtates; and in William, Hereditary Prince Stadtholder, his only brother in-law, who was conceived from the ſpirit of Naſſau, born of the blood of Orange; who has ſuffered under the States-General, who deſcended to his Caſtle of Loo, roſe from the dead at Hattam and Elbourg and aſcended up to Nimeguen. He is ſeated at the right-hand of his brother-in-law, whence he will come with the Pruſſian troops to judge his enemies, and the refractory patriots.

"I believe in the re-union of the Seven Provinces, the remiſſion of ſins to thoſe who will return to the Prince, and an everlaſting peace —Amen!"

Sept. 5. The Pruſſian ambaſſador on Monday left at the ſecretary of ſtate's office, from whence it will be laid before the king, a circumſtantial account of ſuch troops as are arrived in Cleves, and ſuch as are on their march.

The aſſurances which the king receives from the ſovereigns of Europe are ſuch, that none who knows any thing of them, can believe that any thing but peace and tranquillity will, for a long time, be the lot of Great Britain. It is well that the men who call themſelves whigs and patriots, are ignorant of the pacific aſpect of affairs; for if they were not, they could not fail of being very wretched. Nothing can prove ſo detrimental to them and their hopes, as the continuance of peace.

Extract of a letter from Dublin, Aug. 9.

"The right hon. lord viſcount Strangford, ſome time ago arrived from America, where he had been a long time in his majeſty's ſervice, has taken orders, and now enjoys the living which his father held before his deceaſe. His lordſhip is about 30 years of age, and has three children by an American lady (Miſs Philips, daughter of the late colonel Frederick Philips, of New-York) whom he married, with a large fortune, while an enſign."

Sept. 15. The court of France ſeems to be giving away to the united voice of the French parliaments. This appears from the moderate anſwer the French king has given to the court of aids:—He tells them, that he did not expect from their zeal, more extenſive obſervations on the edicts which he made the courts to regiſter. He goes on to ſay, "I have received from the kings my predeceſſors, the plenitude of authority they exerciſed; and that portion of it, which I have entruſted to my court, can never have effect, the withdrawing of my laws without an examination of them, and without a repreſentation of the inconvenіencies that may reſult from them. My courts cannot poſſibly imagine, that they have received full power to reſiſt my will, and no power to carry it into execution.

"I ſhall weigh in my wiſdom your obſervations, with thoſe which I expect from ſeveral merchants, and the chamber of commerce. The execution of my edict ſhall remain ſuſpended, until your meeting after the vacation." [The 1ſt of November—and the edicts were to have taken place the next month.]

Sept. 20. On Saturday morning a meſſenger arrived at the marquis of Carmarthen's office from Paris, whoſe diſpatches are ſaid to contain the ultimate reſolutions of the French court to ſupport the Hollanders, provided that the Pruſſian troops enter the Dutch territories. We do not vouch for the authenticity of the above reports, but they came ſo directly upon the accounts received by yeſterday's mail, that the Pruſſian troops had poſitively marched, and made ſuch an impreſſion on the 'Change, that ſtocks fell yeſterday one per cent.

The expreſs from Holland yeſterday, it is ſaid, brings intelligence, that the duke of Brunſwick, at the head of the Pruſſians, began his march on the 13th inſt.

An order has been iſſued from the war-office for filling up all the vacancies in the three regiments of foot-guards immediately; and to make a return to the board on the firſt of next month.

In conſequence of ſome very important diſpatches from the Hague, meſſengers were yeſterday ſent from the ſecretary of ſtate's office to all the cabinet miniſters out of town, with directions for their immediate return.

The intelligence received yeſterday from Holland, is briefly that the ſtates of Holland have refuſed to give an anſwer to the late memorial of the Pruſſian ambaſſador, and that they have ſent two ambaſſadors to the Pruſſian court to make a perſonal repreſentation of the affair of ſeizing the Princeſs of Orange.

We are well informed, that in caſe of neceſſity, 17 ſail of the line can be got ready for ſea, at a very few days notice.

A morning paper of this day ſays, "We hear for certain, that very ſerious propoſals have lately been made by the Americans, for taking ſhelter once more under the foſtering wings of this country."

NEWPORT, Nov. 8.

State of RHODE-ISLAND and PROVIDENCE PLANTATIONS.

In General Aſſembly, October ſeſſion, A. D. 1787.

An ACT to prevent the SLAVE TRADE, and to encourage the Abolition of Slavery.

WHEREAS the trade to Africa for ſlaves, and the tranſportation and ſelling of them into other countries is inconſiſtent with juſtice, and the principles of humanity, as well as the laws of nature, and that more enlightened and civilized ſenſe of freedom which has of late prevailed. And whereas the General Congreſs of the United States, in the year of our Lord, 1774, taking the ſaid trade into conſideration, agreed and reſolved as follows: That "We will neither import, nor purchaſe any ſlaves imported, after the firſt day of December next; after which time we will wholly diſcontinue the ſlave trade; and will neither be concerned in it ourſelves, nor will we hire our veſſels, or ſell our commodities or manufactures, to thoſe that are."

Nevertheleſs, forgetful of the danger which then impended, and inattentive to the principle of juſtice and ſound policy manifeſted in the aforeſaid reſolutions, a renewal of the African trade for ſlaves has been entered into by divers inhabitants of this ſtate: For the prevention whereof, Be it enacted by this general aſſembly, and by the authority thereof it is enacted, That no citizen of this ſtate, or other perſon reſiding within the ſame, ſhall for himſelf or any other perſon whatſoever, either as maſter, factor, or owner of any veſſel, directly or indirectly, import or tranſport, or buy or ſell, or receive on board their veſſel, with intent to cauſe to be imported or tranſported from their native country, any of the natives or inhabitants of any ſtate or kingdom in that part of the world called Africa, as ſlaves, or without their voluntary conſent.

And be it further enacted by the authority aforeſaid, That every citizen, inhabitant or reſident, as aforeſaid, who ſhall import or tranſport, or cauſe to be imported or tranſported, any of the ſaid inhabitants of Africa, contrary to the true intent and meaning of this act, and be thereof lawfully convicted, ſhall forfeit the ſum of 100l. lawful money, for every perſon by him or them ſo imported or tranſported; and the ſum of 1000l. for every veſſel by him or them employed in the importation or tranſportation aforeſaid; to be recovered by bill, complaint or information, before the ſuperior court, or either of the inferior courts within this ſtate: the one moiety thereof ſhall be paid into the general treaſury, for the uſe of this ſtate; and the other moiety to and for the uſe of the perſon or perſons who ſhall proſecute for and recover the ſame.

Provided nevertheleſs, That this act do not extend to veſſels which have already ſailed, their owners, factors, or commanders, for and during their preſent voyage.

A true Copy.

HARTFORD, Nov. 5.

A correſpondent obſerves, that the religious perſuaſion of Baptiſts have ſhewn their love of order and government by univerſally approving the new conſtitution—the elders in the middle ſtates have addreſſed their people on the ſubject, and it is ſaid the ſame meaſure is in contemplation in the northern.——Call them no longer enthuſiaſts! but the moſt firm friends of virtue and good order.

The inhabitants of the town of Hartford will take notice, that there will be a town meeting at the ſtate houſe on Monday next, at two o'clock P. M. for the purpoſe of chooſing delegates to the ſtate convention.

WILMINGTON, Nov. 14.

Thomas Rodney, Eſquire, having reſigned the office of ſpeaker of the houſe of aſſembly of this ſtate, Jehu Davis, Eſquire, was appointed in his room.

The ſerjeant at arms was ſent to the ſheriff of Suſſex for a return of the election made for that county, which being made, and ſeveral of the gentlemen qualified under it, the houſe on hearing evidence on the merits of the caſe, declared the election void, and ordered a new one to be held on Monday the 26th inſtant.

In the Houſe of Aſſembly of the Delaware State,

Friday, P. M. November 9, 1787.

WHEREAS the convention of deputies from the United States, lately aſſembled in the city of Philadelphia, have propoſed a conſtitution for the ſaid ſtates, to be ſubmitted to a convention of delegates choſen in each ſtate by the people thereof, under the recommendation of its legiſlature, for their aſſent and ratification; and that each convention aſſenting to, and ratifying the ſame, ſhould give notice thereof to the United States in Congreſs aſſembled.

And whereas the United States in Congreſs aſſembled have unanimouſly reſolved, That the ſaid conſtitution, with the reſolutions and letter accompanying the ſame, be tranſmitted to the ſeveral legiſlatures, in order to be ſubmitted to a convention of delegates choſen in each ſtate by the people thereof, in conformity to the reſolves of the convention made and provided in that caſe.

And whereas it is the ſenſe and deſire of great numbers of the good people of this ſtate, ſignified in petitions to this general aſſembly, that ſpeedy meaſures ſhould be adopted to aſſemble a convention within the ſtate, for the purpoſe of deliberating and determining on the ſaid conſtitution.

Reſolved, 1ſt. That it be, and hereby is, recommended to the freemen and inhabitants of this ſtate, who are qualified by law to vote for repreſentatives to the general aſſembly, that they chooſe ſuitable perſons to ſerve as delegates in a ſtate convention for the purpoſe herein before mentioned, that is, for the three counties the ſame number of delegates that each is intitled to of repreſentatives in the general aſſembly, to wit, ten for the county of New-Caſtle, ten for the county of Kent, and ten for the county of Suſſex.

2. That the elections for delegates aforeſaid, in the reſpective counties of this ſtate, be held on Monday the twenty-ſixth day of this inſt. November, at ſame places where the general elections for repreſentives to the general aſſembly are, or may by law be appointed to be held; and that the ſame be conducted by the officers who conduct the ſaid elections of repreſentatives, and agreeable to the rules and regulations thereof; and that the perſons ſo elected to ſerve in convention, meet at the town of Dover on the Monday following.

3. That the delegates, who attend the ſaid convention, be entitled to the ſame allowance per diem, as repreſentatives to the general aſſembly are entitled to receive for their attendance; which ſaid allowance ſhall be paid by the ſtate treaſurer, upon receiving an order for the ſame, ſigned by the preſident of this ſtate.

4. That the preſident or commander in chief tranſmit to the convention aforeſaid when met, an authentic copy of the fœderal conſtitution aforeſaid.

5. That the propoſition ſubmitted to the general aſſembly, by petition from divers of the freemen reſident in the upper part of this ſtate, of ceding to the United States, a diſtrict within the ſtate for the ſeat of the government of the United States, and for the excluſive legiſlation of Congreſs, be and hereby is recommended to the particular conſideration of the convention.

Signed by order of the houſe of aſſembly,

JEHU DAVIS, Speaker.

In COUNCIL, Saturday, A. M. Nov. 10, 1787.

Read and concurred in.

Signed by order of the council,

THOMAS M'DONOUGH, Speaker.

Extract from the minutes,

JAMES BOOTH, Clerk of Aſſembly.

PETERSBURG, Nov. 8.

By a gentleman from Richmond, we are favoured with the following reſolutions, which paſſed the general aſſembly, on Saturday laſt, unanimouſly. They were introduced by Mr George Maſon, a member for the county of Fairfax.

Reſolved, That the preſent ſcarcity of circulating money, has been in a great meaſure occaſioned by the general fear and apprehenſion of an emiſſion of paper currency: inducing moneyed men to lock up their gold and ſilver, preferring the loſs of intereſt, to the riſk of lending or letting out here.

Reſolved, That money, by the common conſent and cuſtom of commercial nations, is and ought to be conſidered as a ſcale or ſtandard by which to eſtimate the comparitive value of commodities, and that nothing can be more improper and unjuſt than to ſubſtitute ſuch a ſtandard as would be more uncertain and variable than the commodities themſelves.

Reſolved, That an emiſſion of paper money would be ruinous to trade and commerce, and highly injurious to the good people of this commonwealth, and that by weakening their manners and morals, deſtroying public and private credit, and all faith between man and man, it would increaſe and aggravate the very evils it is intended to remedy.

Reſolved, That making paper currency, or any thing but gold and ſilver coin, a tender in diſcharge of debts contracted in money, is contrary to every principle of ſound policy, as well as juſtice.

On Wedneſday the 31ſt inſt. the general aſſembly reſolved, That the election of delegates to the convention, ſhall be held in each county, on the firſt day of the court in March next, and the perſons ſo choſen are to aſſemble at the ſtate houſe in the city of Richmond on the firſt Monday in June next.

KEENE, (New-Hampſhire) Oct. 23.

On Thurſday laſt the ſupreme judicial court finiſhed their buſineſs in this town—at ſaid court the following perſons were tried, convicted and ſentenced, as follows, viz.

Charles Finney and Jabez Shapley, for obtaining materials for counterfeiting dollars:—The former ſentenced to pay 25 pounds and coſts;—the latter to pay 10 pounds and coſts.——Jacob Putnam, for paſſing the above, to ſtand one hour in the pillory, on Tueſday next, and pay 25 pounds and coſts.

BOSTON, Oct. 22.

It is preſumed that thoſe ſtates who have heretofore granted powers to Congreſs for regulating trade cannot diſapprove of the new conſtitution; for the grant to Congreſs implied that they were veſted with full powers to enact all laws relative thereto, to be adjudged and executed by officers of their appointment; if they were not veſted with ſuch powers, the grant was a mere nullity, as the local policy of individual ſtates would render their regulations abortive.

LITCHFIELD, Nov. 5.

On Wedneſday laſt, one David Downes was accidentally ſhot, at the houſe of Mr. Roſwell Ranſom, in Roxbury; the circumſtances of this melancholy affair, as near as we can learn,—A company of militia being on their way to join a general training at Southbury, halted at the houſe of Mr. Ranſom, one of them taking up another's gun enquired if it was loaded, and was anſwered by the owner, who was engaged in diſcourſe with another man, that he believed it was not, upon which he ſnapped it, it went off, and ſhattered the head of Mr. Downes in ſuch a ſhocking manner, as to ſcatter his brains about the room; he expired inſtantly. Mr. Downes was between forty and forty-three years of age, he has left a widow and ſix children to lament his loſs. It might be hoped that the number of accidents of this kind would render people cautious!

TRENTON, Nov. 13.

On Saturday evening laſt the houſe of Mr. Daniel Clarke up the river road about five miles from this town, was entirely conſumed by fire before any aſſiſtance could be procured.

Philadelphia, Nov. 17.

Poſtſcript to a letter, dated 18th September, from a gentleman in Amſterdam to his friend on board the ſhip Amſterdam Packet, lying in the Texel.

"This day the minds of the people are more calm than they were on the day when you left this place, having ſince received the agreeable news, that the French troops which are intended for our ſupport are faſt advancing towards this province; and if credit may be given to common report, have already arrived in Rotterdam."

Extract of a letter from Vienna (Germany) dated September 1.

"The letters from Conſtantinople of the 10th of Auguſt had prepared us for the important intelligence, which arrived in this capital by an extraordinary courier expedited on the 19th by the Imperial internuncio. The ſtrange manner in which the Ottoman miniſtry had acted towards M. de Bulgakow, the Ruſſian envoy, in the conferences which he had with them on the 26th and 30th of July, in requiring him to ſubſcribe to the articles propoſed, diſpoſed the minds of men in this capital to expect ſome important event. An extraordinary divan was aſſembled on the 6th of Auguſt, when the majority ſided with the grand viſir and the Reis Effendi (ſecretary of ſtate) who maintained that it would be moſt expedient to declare war, without ſo much as waiting for an anſwer from Peterſburgh. This, together with the extraordinary movements remarked in the Seraglio, afforded a ſtrong preſumption to people of diſcernment, that the Porte had made its deciſion, and that a declaration of war would ſoon be announced. In fact, it was declared at our court in the morning of the 29th, and was the ſame day imparted to the ambaſſadors of Ruſſia and France, who received letters by the ſame courier.

"Whatever have been the motives that determined the Porte to ſo virgorous a meaſure, it cannot be denied, that on this occaſion the Turks have not been ſolicitous to ſave even the appearances of equity, of juſtice, of good faith, or of decency. Violence has preſided at their councils, and governed all their proceedings. They made the moſt harſh demands of M. de Bulgakow, and required that he ſhould accede to them, without waiting the conſent of his court. They obliged him to ſend off an expreſs to Peterſburgh to ſolicit a ſpeedy anſwer from the empreſs; and ſcarcely had the courier time to get beyond the frontiers of Turkey, before they ſuddenly arreſted the miniſter, ſent him to the ſeven Towers, and made a declaration of war.

"It ſhould be remarked, that at the treaty of Laynardgy, the Porte engaged by a ſpecific article not to offer in future ſuch violence to the Ruſſian miniſter, in caſe of a rupture between the two empires; which article they have now broken, with a violent diſregard of juſtice, which ſeems the characteriſtic of their religion.

"This important information has made a great impreſſion upon our court. On the day of its arrival, his majeſty went in the afternoon to his firſt miniſter, with whom he convened the vice chancellor, and one of the ſecretaries of ſtate. Soon after the marquis de Noailles, ambaſſador from France, had a long conference with the prince of Kaunitz; after which he made the neceſſary diſpoſitions to expedite a courier to his own court. He ſet off the 30th, a few hours before two Imperial meſſengers were diſpatched, one to Peterſburgh, and the other to Paris."

GENERAL ASSEMBLY.

SATURDAY, November 10.

The bill for regulating vendues was taken up for a ſecond reading upon motion of Mr. Fitzſimons; but after making a ſhort progreſs therein, it was poſtponed for the preſent, and made the order of the day for Tueſday next.

Mr. Shotts obſerved that the affairs of Wyoming were of ſo important a nature, and ſo critically ſituated that he wiſhed the committee, to whom they were referred, would report on Monday next, and he aſſured the houſe no time ought be loſt in coming to a deciſion upon the ſubject. Mr. Clymer the chairman of the committee ſaid that a report ſhould be made on Monday agreeably to the wiſhes of Mr. Shotts.

Mr. Lollar obſerved that the houſe having intimated a deſire to know what progreſs the committee of accounts had made in deſtroying the paper money now in the treaſury of the ſtate; he begged leave to ſtate from an abſtract, that they had cancelled and burnt bills of various denominations to the amount of 15 000l. and he believed that on Wedneſday next, or before it, the whole ſum of 20 000l. would be deſtroyed. The ſpeaker aſked whether this repreſentation ſhould be entered on the journals as a report in part, which Mr. Logan thought unneceſſary as the committee would ſo ſoon make a final report on the ſubject, but as it was imagined ſome advantage might accrue from the entry, it was at length agreed to.

The committee who had been this morning appointed upon Mr. Kennedy's motion, offered the report, which was to the following effect:

The report having recapitulated the complaint of the members, propoſed theſe reſolutions, viz. 1ſt. That the ſubject of the complaint was a breach of privilege, and 2dly, that the executive council be authoriſed and required to offer a reward for diſcovering the offenders, and bringing them to puniſhment.

The motion as introduced by Mr. Kennedy being read at Mr. M'Lean's requeſt, he aſked upon what grounds the committee had omitted that part which directed the attorney general to proſecute the offenders when diſcovered, and moved that it ſhould be added to the report now preſented. Upon this a deſultory argument aroſe, in which it was inſiſted by thoſe who oppoſed the addition, that it would be wrong, chiefly upon two grounds, viz. firſt, that the offence if conſidered merely as a breach of the peace was not an object deſerving the extraordinary interpoſition of the houſe, as the common courſe of law had provided for the puniſhment of the offenders, and there was no reaſon to preſume that the executive council, the attorney general, and the courts of juſtice would neglect their duty upon this occaſion; and if, on the other hand, the offence was conſidered as a breach of privilege, it would be abſurd and nugatory to direct the attorney general to proſecute the offenders, ſince no court of juſtice had juriſdiction to try them, and in this houſe only could they be puniſhed.

In the ſecond place it was inſiſted that a ſolemn reſolution of this houſe ought not to be added to the weight which a criminal has to encounter on the day of trial; and, however heinous the offence in the preſent inſtance, we ſhould be cautious while we vindicate the honor of the legiſlature, not to treſpaſs upon the liberties of the people.

Mr. Peters added to theſe arguments, that as the houſe ſeemed deſirous to reſent the inſult offered to its members, he hoped the gentleman who propoſed the addition would now withdraw his motion; that the force of an unanimous vote, on the principal queſtion, might not be weakened by dividing the members upon this ſubject. But Mr. M'Lean perſevering in his motion, the queſtion was taken, and there appeared 27 for, and 34 againſt it.

The houſe then unanimouſly adopted the report of the committee.

The houſe adjourned to meet at three o'clock on Monday afternoon.

To the reſpectful Body of Merchants

Of the City and Liberties of Philadelphia.

Gentlemen,

THE ſubſcriber, who has been many years a country trader, and has from time to time laid out conſiderable ſums in this city, and by care and induſtry had collected ſo much property as to flatter him, if properly improved, and no misfortune happening, as to render a comfortable living for himſelf and ſmall family during life: But in the year 1779, he laid out the chief of his property for a plantation, in which he was over-reached in bargain; for it proved to be mortgaged to its full value, and the perſon he purchaſed of, became an inſolvent debtor; and having the uſe of it only four years, was put to the diſagreeable neceſſity of leaving it.—This irrecoverable loſs, diſtreſſing as it has been, has not been the greateſt he has had to ſtruggle with; for in 1783, his wife had the misfortune of a large ſwelling appearing in her left ancle, which proved ſo ſevere, that it had like to have coſt her life. The gentlemen of the faculty exerted themſelves to the utmoſt of their power to procure her relief, but alas! their endeavours proved ineffectual, and ſhe remains a cripple to this day. The mineral waters of Schooly's mountain, in Eaſt New-Jerſey, were recommended, the uſe of which ſhe has tried two ſeaſons, and though they did not effect a cure, yet ſhe obtained conſiderable relief. Being ſtill anxious, and entertaining hopes that ſhe might be recovered, a Root or Indian doctor was next tried, but without effect. She was next adviſed to the ſalt water, which was tried at Long-Iſland, but it has had no ſerviceable effect.—Finding the mineral waters have done her the moſt ſervice of any means ſhe has tried, we have come to the reſolution of moving over the Potowmack river, being well informed that the mineral waters in Berkley and Auguſta counties are of much greater efficacy than thoſe ſhe has tried: and though they ſhould fail of a thorough cure, yet they may make her life more comfortable by living near to them, and make trial of them as occaſion may require. But the ſubſcriber has to acquaint the reſpectful body he now addreſſes, that the many difficulties he has had to ſtruggle with, have rendered his circumſtances extreamly low, and his moveable effects, when ſold for ready money, has fallen vaſtly ſhort of his expectations; his all is inſufficient for ſo extenſive a journey, which impreſſes his mind with very diſtreſſing ideas. But the body he now addreſſes, whoſe benevolence to the diſtreſſed ſtands recorded, by contributing a ſmall matter to his relief, may take off the impreſſion that now prevails in his breaſt; for the value of one ſhilling from each trading houſe, in either money or in any kind of goods, would be a means of facilitating his journey. He is ſenſible of the impropriety of coveting his neighbours' effects, what he certainly has no right to; but his credentials will ſhew that among his qualifications, thoſe of ſobriety and induſtry have always been the conduct of his ſteer

Notwithstanding the distressing situation he is reduced to, he entertains hopes that he may find a vacant corner in the country where he is bound, and be blessed with such a measure of success, as to enable him to pay them again. But should that be for ever out of his power, they have a promise of being repaid by a much abler hand.—He purposes to call at each store in person, and whatever the liberal heart is pleased to assist him with, shall be properly entered in a book, hoping that it may be in his power one day or other to fulfil the above proposal.—And humiliating as his situation is, he is in some measure happy, that he is unnecessitated of soliciting his creditors to compound with him, his misfortunes falling on himself only. Should any gentleman be disposed to assist him, whom he might not have an opportunity of seeing, a subscription is left with Mr. Aitken, Bookseller, for that purpose. May you, Gentlemen, be blessed with every success and prosperity; and that none of you or yours may experience similar circumstances, is the earnest prayer of David Campbell.

SHIP NEWS.

The brig Margery, Capt. Lindsay, is arrived at Rappahannock, from Glasgow, after a very short passage.

His Britannic Majesty's Packet Antelope, Captain Curtis, will sail with the mail from New York for Falmouth on Thursday the 6th of December next, wind and weather permitting.

On Monday the 22d of October, Capt. Childs, of the sloop Sally, belonging to Newport, being then distant from Block Island 25 leagues, saw a sloop labouring through the swell of the seas, whose manœuvres seemed to him very extraordinary; he bore down to speak to her, and found her to be a coasting sloop, the Endeavour, Capt. Malcom, from Passamaquoddy, in the Bay of Funday, which place she had left on the 14th, bound for Boston, but being driven off into the Bay the day after her departure, in a violent gale of wind, without quadrant, map, or any instrument of navigation or navigator on board, was by a series of stormy weather tost about the seas till Capt. Childs fortunately spoke her. The people on board, seven in number, were reduced to great distress for want of water, of which not two gallons remained on board when captain Childs fell in with them. They cannot give any account of their crossing the Shoals of Nantucket, only that in the late gale of wind at N. E, they steered to the westward a considerable time, expecting every moment to make Cape Cod, or to get into Boston Bay. They had a considerable leak to contend with, which compelled them to pump every quarter of an hour: their main sail was torn to pieces in the first gale of wind, and the main boom getting loose, carried away the crotch and quarter rails, so that their destruction seemed inevitable, when, by the favor of Divine Providence, captain Childs came to their relief. As soon as the violence of the sea would allow them to hoist out their boat, captain Childs supplied them with water and other necessaries for their comfort, and staid by them two days; when, after giving them every necessary assistance, and particular instructions how to gain the harbour of Newport, he left them. The above sloop got safe into Newport very early on Friday morning, the 26th ult. and having refitted, proceeded on her voyage for Boston, with a good pilot from Newport.

The Maria, Fort, is advertised to sail from Wilmington on Delaware on the 10th of December next, for Londonderry.

NEW-YORK, Nov. 23.

A letter of the 21st of September from a gentleman in Bristol to his friend in this city, says, "By the public prints this day from London, war seems not far off. Private accounts mention the Prussian army entering Holland, in three divisions, and taking possession of several cities."

We likewise learn, that by the junction of the Prussian and Stadtholderian army, the prince of Orange had been put in possession of every city and garrison in Holland, except Amsterdam, before the sailing of this vessel. That the patriotic party had much relaxed in their zeal for rebellion, and the French mediators were universally execrated, and had therefore prudently withdrawn themselves.—A fleet of observation, consisting of fourteen ships of the line besides frigates, were completely manned and ready for sea to act as occasion may require.

From the New-York Daily Advertiser.

PALPABLE TRUTHS.

Fools! not to know that Half exceeds the Whole.

IT is a palpable truth, that, as Messieurs Randolph, Mason, and Gerry, did not sign the constitution—the majority were all in the wrong.

It is also a truth, that, as Rhode-Island and, perhaps, New-York, are anti-fœderal—the fœderal states will be all in the wrong.

It is also a truth, that, as state officers do not chuse to risk the loss of office—their opponents are all in the wrong.

It is also a truth, that, as some of the European powers wish to keep us a disunited people, and, for that purpose, will, perhaps, employ the grey goose quill of every venal scribbler to disseminate fears and jealousies—that every honest advocate for the fœderal government must be in the wrong.

In short, my dear countrymen, if we suffer ourselves to be guided by the majority—we shall assuredly be all in the wrong.

The Fall of the Leaf.

AN ODE.

SONS of men, averse from teaching,
Turn unto the woods your eyes,
Hear the lessons they are peaching,
They'll instruct you to be wise.

Where is now our boasted glory,
Leaves with which we did abound,
See them scatter'd all before you,
Lying with'ring on the ground.

Doctors skill'd in mystic pages,
Seeking truth tho' void of fame;
Wise and venerable sages,
Here's a moralizing theme.

Blooming virgins, charming creatures,
Blessed with a comely face,
Boast not of your fading features,
Summer gives to winter place.

Youths tho' full of manly graces,
Know those flow'rs will swiftly waste,
Time shall blight them on your faces,
Ye shall feel cold winter's blast.

Sons of sport, with joy abounding,
To your mirth the woods reply,
We so late with songs resounding,
Now in mournful silence lie.

Griping misers, greedy wretches,
We your very case express;
We are strip'd of all our riches,
They forsake us in distress.

Reverend sires, with age grown hoary,
Think not life shall still remain;
See in us your falling glory,
Falling ne'er to spring again.

Learn, O man, that grandeur's fading,
Honours like our leaves decay,
We were happy both in Eden,
Now we swiftly fade away.

Then seek out that land eternal,
Where the tree of life doth grow,
There the leaf is ever vernal,
There no winter tempests blow.

BON MOT OF MILTON.

Valuable Land for Sale.

Will be exposed to Sale by Public Vendue, on Thursday the 29th of November next, at the Court-House in Harford county, state of Mryland,

TWO very valuable and well-improved FARMS, late the property of Henry Wilson and Son, about two miles and a half from the Court-house, 24 miles from Baltimore, 9 miles from Joppa, and 8 miles from a landing at Otter-Point, near the Bay. The two farms together contain 929 acres, but will be divided nearly equal. One half the land is cleared, the remainder in timber; about 60 acres of meadow made, and about as much more may be cleared, and a large proportion of the whole may be watered at a small expence by several springs, and a considerable run, that flows through the centre of the land; the winter's run likewise flows through a part of it, on which is a mill seat. There is on each farm a good brick house, with barn, stables, &c. a large orchard stocked with the best fruit, and a large garden paled in. The situation is high and healthy, the soil good for either farming or grazing: they are convenient to several merchant mills, where there is a constant market for all kinds of grain.

Those who wish to view the land, on application to Mess. Ashton and Waters, the present tenants, will be shewn it. Possession will be given the 1st of January, if required. The title good and free of all incumbrances. The terms will be easy to the purchaser, and will be made known on the day of sale, by Wm. WEST.

An ODE.

NATURE bounteously array'd
Ev'ry animal she made
With such arms as best conduce
To its safety or its use.
Nature's horny terrors spread
O'er the bull's majestic head:
Hoofs she gave the gen'rous steed,
And to hares the lightning's speed:
To the scaly kind she gave
Fins to cut the chrystal wave:
To the birds, exempt from care,
Wings to sport in fields of air;
But to noble man assign'd
An intrepid, martial mind.
What had nature left to grace
The diviner female race?
Beauty! whose prevailing charms
Prove the most resistless arms.
Beauty shield and sword supplies,
Beauty vanquishes the wise!

Foreign Intelligence,

Received by the ship Sally, captain Janny, arrived at New-York from Bristol.

From the LONDON GAZETTE, September 22.

HAGUE, September 18.

ON Thursday last the Prussian army, under the command of his serene highness the duke of Brunswick, passed the river at Nimeguen, and advanced from thence in three columns. On their approach, the rhingrave of Salm evacuated Utrecht, after having nailed up 140 pieces of cannon, which he was obliged to leave behind him, and destroyed, as far he was able, the powder and other stores, retiring with what he could collect of the garrison, in great disorder, towards Amsterdam and Naerden. On Sunday the prince of Orange's troops entered the towns of Utrecht, Montfort and the Vaart; and no opposition was made in any part of the province.

Intelligence was received at the Hague of Gorcum, Dordt, Schoonhoven, and several other of the principal towns of South Holland, having surrendered, without bloodshed, to the duke of Brunswick. The states of Holland issued orders for breaking and disarming the Free Corps; and late this evening they passed a resolution for restoring his serene highness the stadtholder to all his rights and honors, with the command of this garrison; and a deputation is appointed to the duke of Brunswick, and a letter sent off to invite the Prince of Orange to return to his residence here.

ST. JAMES's, September 21.

This day his excellency the marquis del Campo, ambassador extraordinary and plenipotentiary from the court of Spain, had his first private audience of his majesty to deliver his credentials.

[The London Gazette also contains a proclamation for the encouragement of seamen and landmen to enter on board his majesty's ships of war; to induce them to do which, the following bounties are offered, viz. to all able seamen, not above 50 nor less than 20 years old, who shall voluntarily enter, 3l. each, and to ordinary seamen of that description 2l. each; to able bodied landmen, not more than 35, nor less than 20 years old, 1l. each. And in case, after entering, any of them should absent themselves, or enter on board other ships, in order to obtain the said bounty, they are to forfeit their wages, and be severely punished. These bounties are to be paid immediately after the third muster.

And also another proclamation recalling and prohibiting seamen (being his majesty's natural born subjects) from serving foreign princes and states, on pain of being proceeded against according to the utmost severities of the law, in case they do not forthwith obey his majesty's command; and also offering rewards for discovering such seamen as shall conceal themselves, viz. 2l. for every able, and 30s. for every ordinary seaman.]

BERLIN, September 1.

A terrible fire has reduced to ashes the city of Ruppin, situate in the Marche of Brandenburgh, about eight or nine leagues from Berlin; there are not above 240 houses standing: more than 600 have been burnt, as well as 3 churches, the town-house, and the building belonging to prince Ferdinand of Prussia, and the royal magazine, where there was a quantity of cloathing ready to be delivered to the troops, &c. The fire lasted 12 hours. They estimate the loss at many millions.

VIENNA, August 22.

Last Sunday the 20th inst. the deputies of the Belgic provinces had their final audience of the emperor, with which they had reason to be very well satisfied. They relate on this subject, that encouraged by the goodness and affability with which the emperor spoke to them in this last audience, they besought his majesty to repair in person to the Low Countries. On which, the emperor taking off his hat, holding it in his hand, said to them, "You see I have only a black cockade."—"Sire, replied one of the deputies immediately, that will not hinder your faithful Brabanters from throwing themselves at your majesty's feet, if you will grant them the favor they ask for." The day after this audience, six of the deputies set off for their respective countries, and the rest will immediately follow. The result of the long and frequent conferences they had with the emperor, is, as far as we can tell, chiefly as follow:—The emperor absolutely requires the states to put every thing in the same state they were at the time of the publication of the imperial ordinances concerning the establishment of intendants, and the new regulating of justice: in consequence of which he desires the subsidy to be re-established; that those who were employed and dismissed be recalled, and those put in their places by the states be sent back; that the injurious memorials presented to their royal highnesses be considered as void, and the concessions they have occasioned as extorted by fear, and of no value: that the Convents, &c. which his majesty suppressed, be always accounted so; and finally, that the compacts, with regard to benefices, be abolished without delay.

On the other hand, his imperial majesty has assured the deputies, that there shall be no intendants and new tribunals, that the military conscription shall never be established in the Low Countries any more than the territorial impost of 40 per cent. and that his majesty will let the abbies subsist with the enjoyment of their privileges; and when in virtue of these assurances the states have executed the orders of their sovereign, and restored peace in the provinces, the emperor promises to take into consideration the remainder of their griefs, and to remedy them without injuring their privileges, which he never intended to infringe in the least; he knows well that the chief matter in question being once decided to the satisfaction of the Belgic provinces, it will be difficult for the states to form any other pretensions. From these circumstances, it is therefore probable, that peace and tranquillity will be soon re established in the Low Countries, to the reciprocal advantage of government and its subjects.

Sept. 25. We have just learned by letters, posterior to those received on the 29th of August, that it was precisely on the 16th of last month, that M. de Bulgakow was sent for, and committed to the Seven Towers, in consequence of the declaration of war.

That minister was conducted to prison by a Pada, escorted by a number of Janissaries. He was permitted to take with him all that he wanted, and to be served by his own domestics. Couriers were at the same time expedited to the different towns, in which the Russians had consuls; who were all taken into custody, under the pretext of being secured from the insults of the populace.

All the Russian subjects, who carried on trade in the Turkish dominions, have received orders to withdraw in six months, after the liquidation of all demands for and against them. It is said, that several merchant ships, carrying the Russian flag, have been stopped at Constantinople, the Turks being desirous to examine the state of the crews and the cargoes, and it is believed that a similar embargo has been laid in all other Turkish ports.

BRUSSELS, Sept. 3.

On the 26th ult. all the officers of the corps of volunteers, who had formerly served in his imperial majesty's troops, were commanded by general Murray, who, representing that after the oath they took on their admission they could not with propriety enter into service again, he intimated to them to quit the volunteers uniform, under pain of not only being declared suspected, but even rebels to their sovereign. This they immediately complied with, and on their departure the governor general gave their dismission to the magistrate, who had likewise received an order to disband the corps of volunteers, which he had authorized for the maintenance of the good order and police of that city.

WEZEL, Sept. 7.

This morning all the general officers assembled at the duke of Brunswick's, after which all the generals, whose regiments were not here, set off to join them; the staff and subaltern officers were then assembled, and notice was given them that the army would march on the 9th, at four o'clock in the morning, and 60 rounds of ball have been just delivered to each man of this garrison: the same will be delivered to all the regiments of this province. The troops will march in two columns along the east and west sides of the Rhine, by Nimeguen and Arnheim, towards Utrecht; the heavy artillery will be brought to Arnheim by shipping. We do not know what has occasioned this hasty marching of the troops; all we learn is, that this courier arrived from Berlin, whose dispatches we have no doubt gave rise to the sudden motion of the army.

UTRECHT, Sept. 10.

The provinces of Guelderland, Zealand, Friesland, and the pretended states of Amersfort, have accepted a mediation composed of the courts of France, Prussia, and England, and the Emperor, if his majesty desires to assist. These provinces have entreated those of Holland and Overyssel by letter to extend their resolutions already known on that subject farther, by likewise accepting the mediation of the courts of Prussia and London. We do not as yet know if they will consent to it.

They expect on the 16th inst. at the Hague, M. St. Priest, the new French ambassador, who was to leave Versailles the 18th of this month.

LONDON,

Sept. 8. Yesterday morning three messengers in succession, within about an hour of each other arrived in town from Flanders, with dispatches for the king. They went to no minister; their orders being to go to the king only. And last night about seven o'clock a messenger arrived from France, with dispatches for the king; his but majesty being gone to Kew, the messenger went to him.

The language of the banished parliament of Paris still continues manly and spirited: in a meeting at Troyes the 27th ult. they came to several very spirited resolutions, one of which was, that they will, at the hazard of their lives and fortunes, firmly maintain the rights of their fellow citizens and themselves.

Sept. 13. The court of directors of the honorable East India company yesterday agreed to contract for the Madeira wine they want for their settlements abroad for the ensuing season, at 17l. 10s. per pipe of 115 gallons, which is considerably lower, than they have paid for this article. Last year the contract price was 20l. the year preceding 26l. and before that the prices were from 30l. to 30 guineas.

A gentleman just returned from a tour through the greatest part of France declares, that the people of that country are generally against the commercial treaty; and when he was at Rouen, a ship arrived at that port, on board of which were several crates of English earthen ware, which were no sooner landed than the populace seized them, broke the contents in pieces, and threw them into the sea.

A seizure of a large and rich assortment of India muslins from England was made about a fortnight ago at Havre de Grace. They were immediately imported as British manufactures, but an officer of the king's customs there detected the artifice, and had the whole parcel amounting to 6000l. sterling, confiscated. The vessel that carried them over was not stopped, as in former times, pursuant to the compact entered into by the two nations respecting the navigations of the respective countries.

The following instance of the finer feelings is recorded in an Edinburgh paper of last week. Thursday se'nnight the grave-digger of North Leith died, and on the Saturday following his wife, who had long acted as an assistant—"did for him what he had done for thousands." This is what John Blair might have said on the occasion; but in plain English, his wife dug his grave.

A woman named Revel died lately at Wexford in Ireland, aged 27 years. Her disease was the dropsy, and she had been tapped 111 times, in the course of which operations she discharged 90 barrels, 33 gallons, and three pints of water.

A verbal notice has been sent by M. de Thulemeyer, his Prussian majesty's envoy extraordinary at the Hague, to the pensionary of Holland, demanding immediate satisfaction to be made to the princess of Orange, for the insults offered to her person; to which he has demanded an answer in four days.

On Thursday last the magistrates of Aberdeen, fined two young gentlemen of fortune and rank in ten guineas, for profanation of Sunday, by riding a race for a bet on the sands, and afterwards galloping on the streets in a manner which endangered the lives of some of the citizens.

Sept. 20. Sunday a party of the artillery, with two waggons, laden with proper implements, marched to Dover, with orders to mount the cannon which were dismounted at the peace.

Commodore Corby's squadron in the Mediterranean is to be immediately re-enforced, in consequence of the rupture between Russia and the Turks.

The differences which subsisted between the court of Portugal and Madrid, on account of the detention of dollars, to a great amount, have been amicably accommodated.

September 22. An order was yesterday sent off to the commissioner at Plymouth, to get three more ships of the line ready for sea with the utmost dispatch.

Last night press warrants were sent down from the admiralty-office to every sea-port for the impressing of men into his majesty's service: and early this morning a general sweep was made on the river here, by which upwards of 1500 men were obtained. The press was also very hot.

GLASGOW, Sept. 4.

It is with great concern I sit down to give you an account of a desperate affray which happened here this forenoon. For some time past the operative weavers have been in very bad humor respecting the reduction of their wages upon some kinds of work. This forenoon a number of them assembled and cut several webs out of the looms of those persons who agreed to work at the reduced prices. The magistrates met, and sent the town officers to seize the perpetrators, but finding themselves too weak, they returned. The magistrates then went along with them, and came up with the operative weavers (who had several of the webs they had cut out in their hands), about the east end of Gallowgate. The magistrates remonstrated with the weavers, who, in place of listening to their arguments, pelted them with stones, and one of them struck the lord provost a violent blow on the arm; some others were wounded with stones. It was then found necessary to call for the aid of the military, who conducted the magistrates back to the council chamber, where they deliberated upon what was to be done. The military were ordered to draw up at the Cross with fixed bayonets, and their guns loaded with ball. The magistrates then came out, and caused the riot act to be read to an immense multitude, who were now assembled, and gave suitable advice to the populace, warning them of their danger, and desiring them to disperse, but in vain. The soldiers were then ordered to the Gallowgate, where the principal body of the weavers were. On approaching them the military endeavoured to line the streets and lanes, when a scuffle ensued, upon which the soldiers were ordered to fire, which they did, and killed four or five persons, and wounded several. After this, a number were taken prisoners and lodged in gaol. The military still remain under arms, and expresses have been sent to Linlithgow and Hamilton, for a reinforcement of troops.

An express is sent to Edinburgh, for some dragoons to be sent, and orders are dispatched by his excellency general Machay, for detachments of those stationed at Irwine, Ayr, Beith, and other places, to repair immediately to Glasgow.

Sept. 5. Owing to the vigilance and attention of the magistrates and sheriff, no farther disturbance has taken place, though the rioters appear as yet by no means pacified.

On Monday evening the magistrates ordered a number from the respective incorporations, to attend during the night, to preserve the peace, which was not interrupted till yesterday, when some tumults and disturbances having arisen in the adjacent villages of Calton and Gorbals, by some persons cutting out and burning webs taken in by operatives of a peaceable disposition, the magistrates and sheriff, accompanied by the 29th regiment, again repaired to the Calton; but the rioters having dispersed before they arrived, nothing further could be done than publicly warning all persons of the bad consequences of the practices of that and the former day. From which, and the great attention still observed, it is thought that peace and tranquility will be maintained. It is to be hoped, that a proper understanding between the manufacturers and operatives will soon take place.

There are various accounts respecting the number that have suffered on this occasion; the most general one is, that three persons were killed, three mortally wounded, and several slightly.

Early on Tuesday morning a detachment of the 39th regiment arrived from Beith, and more troops are hourly expected.

On Monday night the mob demolished most of the windows of a large cotton manufactory at the head of John's-street.

The magistrates and sheriff yesterday issued a proclamation, wherein, after narrating the circumstances of the riot, and the fatal consequences arising from it, they add, that altho' they deeply regret the disagreeable necessity to which they were reduced, and are exceedingly sorry for the unfortunate individuals who have suffered upon the occasion; yet as they are informed, that the operative weavers are still continuing the before-mentioned lawless and unwarrantable practices, the magistrates and sheriff think it their duty, to give this public intimation, that they are determined to continue their utmost exertions to suppress these daring combinations, by every legal means within their power, whatever the consequences may be to the unfortunate individuals who may suffer by their exertions. All persons therefore within the city and suburbs are hereby strictly prohibited and discharged from the continuation of these daring combinations and practices, and from gathering together in crowds upon the streets, particularly in the night-time: certifying to all persons who transgress, after the publication of this proclamation, that they will be punished with the utmost rigor of the law. And parents and masters are hereby strictly required to keep their children, servants, and apprentices within their quarters, in the evenings and in the night-time, as they shall answer at their highest peril.

Sept. 6. I have the pleasure to acquaint you, that all is now quiet, and good order restored. Six persons who were active in the late disturbances, and a petty writer who acted as their secretary, are committed to gaol. The eight persons who were killed and died of their wounds, were buried this day, and not the smallest disturbance; every thing respecting the interment was carried on with the greatest decency. Several reinforcements of troops are arrived from different quarters, and the town is at present full of soldiers.

AMERICA.

NEW-YORK, Nov. 10.

Yesterday sailed his Britannic Majesty's Packet Halifax, captain Boulderson, in which went passengers, F. P. Van Berkel, Esquire, son of his excellency Mynheer Van Berkel, ambassador from their high mightinesses the states general of Holland.

Mr. Henry Waddington, merchant of this city, and

Mr. Travers, merchant of Manchester, in Lancashire.

Extract of a letter from a gentleman in Georgia to his friend in this city, dated the 18th of October, 1787

"The Savannah and Augusta Gazettes will give you the story of the Indian war. What is precisely the state of facts, it is difficult from the present information to determine. The secret, dark, and bloody attack of Indians is commonly so coloured by the fright it occasions, that it is difficult to know the truth even from the persons who were present. Their accounts will be so different, that in a few days they circulate, as so many separate and distinct attacks. The four or five which you see mentioned in September, all originate from the killing and scalping the boy and girl on the 17th ult. in the county of Washington.

"The first question is, what was the cause that set them in motion at this time? I find it is very industriously circulated by those who wish to give a bad complexion to every thing that concerns our government, that it originates from the cruel and abusive policy of the state towards them. I have too much confidence in your candor and good sense to believe you capable of harboring such public slander without enquiring into the information. If you will give yourself the trouble of examining the different laws and regulations of this state on those subjects, you will find them in general dictated by a very just, and liberal policy towards them, and that measures have been invariably pursued to prevent, as far as possible, all encroachments on the Indian rights. I wish there might not be greater grounds of charge against the United States in their treatment of the Indians north west of the Ohio.

"The half-breed M'Gillivray, the natural son of a former inhabitant of this state, by an Indian woman, has been attempting, for this year past, to instigate the Upper Creeks to lay claim to part of the three frontier counties of this state, which are two or three hundred miles distant from their towns, and never were their hunting grounds. These lands were purchased, principally, and a great part of them granted out by Gov. Wright, previous to the late war. This was acknowledged and completed, as a condition of the peace made with them at the close of the war, in which they had continually borne arms against the state. The Indians appeared in general well satisfied; I have myself seen them at treaties, in large collections of the principal men of their nation, at different times for two years afterwards, mark out the established boundary line of our frontier counties, which they appeared in general to acknowledge as the boundary between us and them, and I never heard or knew of any objection to it during that time. M'Gillivray has certainly been using his utmost endeavors for some time past to excite uneasiness among them. I have reason to believe he is connected with some individuals within these states, and that if he can succeed in pushing our inhabitants back to the river Ogechee, as he says, which will leave our state to be in breadth but about thirty miles, he has already secured to himself the Indians claim, and thus a tract of country which is now the property and support of not less than a thousand families, will belong solely to himself and his associates; my opinion of him is, that his designs are wicked and unwarrantable, and that the peace and happiness of the indians is not at all the object.

"The Indians have appeared in general to be very indifferent to his measures, probably some small scalping parties may have come under his influence. I am not certain that our present disturbances arise from any other cause, than that which has been so long known, and so often deplored in every part of America, the impossibility of controuling the crimes and passions of Indians, or of the rude and unmanageable inhabitants of a frontier. The party that killed the young man in Green county in the month of May, appear to have done it for the sake of stealing the negro who was with him, and that they might escape without being pursued. The neighbours and relations of the young man pursuing the track of the villains, in the height of their rage, unfortunately fell upon a hunting party of Indians who were not concerned in the mischief, and slaughtered a great part of them. This may have been the sole cause of all that has yet happened.

"Revenge, the strong passion of savage nature, is now so much enkindled, that large parties are in motion on both sides. I am not without my fears that the lower towns of the Indians have by this time been attacked and probably destroyed, which must inevitably bring on a very general Indian war.

"How to prevent such mischief, is a question in which humanity is greatly interested. Mere laws and punishments, in their ordinary administration in civil society, prove entirely ineffectual to the controul of such mad & lawless subjects. Let it be tried in every form, and I scarcely think there are any proper measures of that sort which we have not tried, even to severe corporal punishment, it will be found on trial, that a constant military force, and that only can keep peace on the frontiers. These disturbances are commonly brought on by a few individuals, a small well appointed guard would be entirely sufficient to over-awe them on both sides. This measure has long been in contemplation, and at this time I think the peace, policy and reputation of the state, render it indispensably necessary."

Nov. 15. Last Friday arrived at Philadelphia, the ship Amsterdam Packet, captain Collet, in seven weeks from Amsterdam; a gentleman who came passenger in the ship, writes to his friend in this city, that the Prussian army had entered Holland—that they had taken the towns of Naarden and Weesp—that the patriots had evacuated Utrecht, of which place the prince stadtholder had taken possession, and that the citizens of Amsterdam had secured themselves from an attack of the Prussians, by laying the adjacent country under water. This account is to be relied on, as the gentleman who writes the letter was an eye witness to the transaction.

On Saturday last, Col. Humphreys proceeded from hence on his journey to the silent retreat of the illustrious Washington, where, it is said, he is to pass the ensuing winter.

We hear, that his excellency Thomas Chittenden, Esq is by a great majority of the freemen, elected governor of the state of Vermont for the year ensuing.

The following original petition is actually preserved in the tower of London:

"Copy of a letter from an Irish Warder, addressed to the governor of the tower, paying the liberty to sleep out at nights," &c.

"May it please your worship's honor and glory; I Patrick Cogan, having a wife very ill, beg the leave of laying out of the tower; and I faithfully promise never to go out till after the gates are locked up at night, and always to come in before they are open in the morning."

Yesterday, in the afternoon, by some accident, or great negligence, the distillery, near the watering-place at Brooklyn, the property of Dr. Jones, and the late Philip P. Livingston, Esquire, of this city, took fire, and was entirely consumed, with all the stock of rum, molasses, &c. amounting to a very considerable sum. On the appearance of the fire, many boats were expedited from the city, but not soon enough to prevent the spreading of the firey devastation. The flames were seen from the city to rage with vehemence upon several other buildings. The late hour in which this unhappy conflagration took place, prevented us from obtaining a more particular account for this day's paper.

Philadelphia, Nov. 19.

Extract of a letter from a Merchant in Amsterdam to his Friend in New-York, dated September 18, 1787.

"The consternation reigning throughout this city, and our present alarming situation, prevent me from giving you so circumstantial an account as I wish to do. Certainly you never thought that our contests would ever have been so serious. In a few days our fate will be decided. A formidable army of 30 000 Prussian troops, provided with a compleat park of artillery, spreading a terrible panic through the whole country, is now within our territories, and is rapidly advancing towards this city. On receiving this dreadful news, our city gates were shut, and all the bridges drawn up, so that it is at present impossible for any person to leave the place or to enter it. God knows what will become of us; in his power alone will it be to avert the impending calamities. How many families, exposed to the utmost danger, would now be glad to repair to America, and there enjoy peace and real liberty, were the extreme distance between us not so very discouraging; for in case our Patriots should be compelled to submit, we are determined to leave this our native country."

Early on Thursday morning a man, living at the upper end of Third street, having occasion to go to the river for a few buckets of water, in Vine, between Water and Front streets, was attacked by two armed villains, who obliged him to strip off every thing except his shirt. They carried off their booty, and have not since been heard of.

It appears from a report delivered by the comptroller to the committee of ways and means, that the late lottery has not produced more than 1700l, which sum the General Assembly, on Wednesday last, resolved to authorise the executive council to apply to the improvement of the western roads, and the navigation of the Schuylkill, agreeably to the appropriation of the lottery act.

Philadelphia, October 16, 1787.

For Griſt Mills & other Water Works

On an extenſive Plan,
One of the beſt ſituations in America is offered

FOR SALE,

Together With

Batſto Iron-Works,

At the forks of Little Egg-Harbour river, one of the moſt healthy ſpots in New Jerſey, 38 miles by land from Philadelphia, and within a few hours ſail of New York.

THE river, communicating with the ſea by the beſt inlet on the Jerſey coaſt, is navigable for veſſels of 200 tons within a few miles of the works; thoſe of 100 tons may approach within one mile; flats and ſcows, carrying 10 or 12 tons, load and unload at the works. The uſual freight to New York or Philadelphia is 10 ſhillings per ton. The furnace ſtream affords plenty of water, in the dryeſt ſeaſon, for 3 or 4 pair of mill ſtones, beſides ſupplying the iron works.——An excellent dam, which has been increaſing in ſtrength many years by the cinder from the furnace, is well ſecured from the danger of freſhes, and the works are ſcarcely ever injured or delayed by either ice or backwater, though the tide ſwells to the foot of the dam: mills may therefore be erected at a moderate expence. This being a part of the country in which many people and many teams are neceſſarily employed in collecting and preparing for market the iron and lumber with which it abounds, and at the ſame time illy adapted to the raiſing of grain for their ſupport, there is, and muſt continue to be, a demand for large quantities of midlings, cornell, ſhorts and bran, at advanced prices; and the conveniencp of conveying flour at a light expence, either to New York or Philadelphia, or to more diſtant markets, will not be overlooked nor conſidered as of ſmall importance, eſpecially as there are few mill ſeats of any conſiderable capacity equally adapted to the New York market, which is not unfrequently ſupplied with ſuperfine flour from Philadelphia. A choice of the various kinds of wheat may be drawn to this ſeat from Virginia, Maryland, Delaware, New Jerſey, and New York with greater eaſe and convenience than to almoſt any other mills now in being.

The FURNACE, which by the extenſive lands annexed to it, is abundantly ſupplied with wood and ore, is now in blaſt, and is noted for producing the beſt hollow ware in America, the metal being peculiarly well adapted to the making of caſtings of all kinds, as well as excellent bar iron.

A FORGE, with four fires and two hammers, belongs to the eſtate, and ſtands about half a mile from the furnace, on another fine ſtream which affords plenty of water.

A SLITTING and ROLLING MILL, having been diſuſed for the laſt two or three years, may want ſome repairs to prepare it for uſe; but the forebays and gates are in perfect order, and being in the proper ſpot for griſt mills, may be appropriated to that uſe.

Two SAW MILLS in good order, and a ſmall Griſt Mill.

The MANSION HOUSE is elegantly ſituated about 100 yards from the furnace, on an height which commands a view of the whole works, and of the two villages formed by the ſurrounding buildings belonging to the eſtate, ſuch as barns, ſtables, coal houſes, workſhops, ſtorehouſes and dwellings for workmen. Adjoining the manſion houſe is a large and fruitful garden, affording plenty of vegetables, and well ſtored with choſen fruit trees; alſo a young bearing orchard, containing near 2000 apple trees, moſtly grafted.

Theſe excellent accommodations for extenſive and profitable manufactories, are offered to ſale at a very low rate, and on terms of payment calculated for the eaſe of the purchaſer, who may pay the greater part in the produce of the Iron Works, at a price to be agreed upon; and they are capable of producing more in one year, than will pay the whole price demanded.

For particulars, apply to WILLIAM RICHARDS, at the ſaid Works, JOHN COX, at Bloomſbury, near Trenton, or CHARLES PETTIT, in Philadelphia.

TWO very valuable and well-improved FARMS, late the property of Henry Wilson and Son, about two miles and a half from the Court-house, 24 miles from Baltimore, 9 miles from Joppa, and 8 miles from a landing at Otter-Point, near the Bay. The two farms together contain 929 acres, but will be divided nearly equal. One half the land is cleared, the remainder in timber; about 60 acres of meadow made, and about as much more may be cleared, and a large proportion of the whole may be watered at a small expence by several springs, and a considerable run, that flows through the centre of the land; the Winter's run likewise flows through a part of it, on which is a mill seat. There is on each farm a good brick house, with barn, stables, &c. a large orchard stocked with the best fruit, and a large garden paled in. The situation is high and healthy, the soil good for either farming or grazing: they are convenient to several merchant mills, where there is a constant market for all kinds of grain.

Foreign Intelligence,

VIENNA, Auguſt 15.

All the deputies from the Hereditary Low Countries are arrived, to the number of 26. Three deputies are lodged in a hotel at the emperor's expence, and 20 coaches are allotted to attend them. Yeſterday they made their firſt viſit in a body to the chancellor Prince de Kaunitz. This morning at ten o'clock they went to court, to pay their duty to the Serene Governor General of the Low Countries, with whom they found the old miniſter plenipotentiary the Count de Belgioſo. At noon they went a ſecond time to the caſtle; and after divine ſervice, they had their firſt audience of the emperor. The Abbe de Grimbergue ſpoke in the name of all the deputation. His majeſty received them in the moſt gracious manner, and converſed with ſome of them upon different ſubjects. As to what concerned their miſſion, the monarch referred them to the Prince of Kaunitz, who will communicate his intentions to them. Every poſſible attention has been ſhewn theſe Belgic deputies. Even their baggage has not been examined at the cuſtom houſe, and they enjoy in that reſpect a freedom which is only granted to foreign miniſters. All this argues very much in favor of an amicable arrangement; nevertheleſs the Imperial troops continue their march towards the places of their deſtination.

The emperor is going to the camp at Prague, where the nuptials of Prince Anthony of Saxony with the Archdutcheſs of Tuſcany will be celebrated. This marriage is abſolutely concluded upon. It is ſaid that the emperor will conduct his niece himſelf to Dreſden, and that his Imperial Majeſty would willingly have an interview with the King of Pruſſia.

AMERICA.

BOSTON, November 8.

On Tueſday laſt a motion was made in the houſe of repreſentatives, for the appointment of a committee to conſider the expediency of lengthening the time for the operation of the tender act. To determine this important point, it became neceſſary to diſcuſs the propriety of this new and ſingular expedient, to favor the debtor at the expence of the creditor. It is not in our power to go into the particulars of this intereſting debate; which was conducted againſt the commitment of the motion, by Meſſrs. Sedgwick, Dawes, Brooks, Kilham, Bowdoin, and Jarvis; and in favor of the meaſure, by Dr. Taylor, Dr. Holton, Mr. Biſhop and others. The gentlemen in ſupport of the motion urged the neceſſity of the times, and the incapacity of government to do juſtice to the public creditors, deducing from this laſt conſideration, a concluſion which thoſe againſt the motion did not ſeem willing to allow the force of: for, though the deficiency of the ſtate was confeſſed on all hands, they could not conceive why this ſhould operate as a reaſon for a ſimilar delinquency on the part of the individual.

Againſt the tender act, was ſtrongly urged, the unconſtitutionality, injuſtice and impolicy of ſuch expedients in any ſituation, however diſagreeable: This law was declared to be retroſpective, contrary to the practice and experience of older countries, anti-commercial, deſtructive of honor, confidence, and of all the eſſential obligations which bind ſociety together. It was repreſented as a poor expedient, procuring perhaps a temporary convenience, at the expence of a laſting benefit. The growth of this country was, it was declared, owing to the credit of individuals,—but this was now at an end. Money, the vital principle of commerce, of the arts, of manufactures, and of agriculture, was confined in the cheſts of its poſſeſſors, when it might be circulating, to the appreciation of our land, and to the extenſion of our trade.

The queſtion was carried in the affirmative by 100 againſt 77; and a committee was choſen, conſiſting of Mr. Dawes, Dr. Holton, Dr. Taylor, Mr. Biſhop, and Mr. Jarvis, to report accordingly.

Laſt Tueſday evening as Mr. Nathaniel Cunningham of Little-Cambridge, (butcher) was returning home from town, he was ſtopped on the Neck by four highwaymen, who commanded him to deliver his money; at the ſame time two of them preſented and ſnapped loaded piſtols at his breaſt; while a third ſtood over him with a drawn knife, threatening him with immediate death if he refuſed to comply—after a ſhort pauſe, Mr. Cunningham delivered them his money; they then abuſed him, and ordered him to go about his buſineſs, and immediately fled towards the town; but Mr. Cunningham meeting with timely aſſiſtance, they were cloſely purſued, and two of them taken at the entrance of the town, and committed to goal the ſame evening, to receive the juſt reward of their villainy.

It has been frequently remarked, obſerves a correſpondent, that it ſeems to have been reſerved to the people of this country, by their conduct and example, to decide the important queſtion, whether ſocieties of men are really capable or not, of eſtabliſhing good government from reflection and choice, or whether they are for ever deſtined to depend, for their political conſtitutions, on accident and force? If there be any truth in the remark, the criſis at which we are arrived may with propriety be regarded as the æra in which that deciſion is to be made; and a wrong election of the part we ſhall act, may, in this view, deſerve to be conſidered as the general misfortune of mankind.

The ſupreme executive of this commonwealth have been pleaſed to grant another reprieve, of one fortnight, to John Shean, under ſentence of death for burglary, the term of whoſe former reprieve expires this day.

We hear from Dorcheſter, that on Monday the 29th ult. the militia of that town, and of Milton, turned out, and formed a battalion, near Dr. Baker's, at ſaid Dorcheſter, under the command of lieutenant colonel Williams; where they were reviewed by colonel Badlam, who was introduced to the command by colonel Sumner, after making a ſpeech upon his reſignation: captain Robinſon's company appeared complete in uniform, and after performing their uſual firings with the battalion, the whole moved off, and marched to Milton, near general Warren's, with their proper guards, and again went through their firings and manœuvres, and made a very reſpectable appearance. When the troops were diſmiſſed, the officers, accompanied by a number of reſpectable gentlemen, retired to Voſe's Hall, and after a genteel repaſt, the following toaſts were drank, viz.

1ſt. The United States of America.

2d. The Congreſs.

3d. Our illuſtrious general Waſhington, and the other members of the Fœderal Convention.

4th. A ſpeedy confirmation of the new fœderal government,—may it be as laſting as it is important.

5th. The preſent and former governor, and the commonwealth of Maſſachuſetts.

6th. Our glorious ally the King of France.

7th. Our miniſters at foreign courts, and foreign miniſters at the courts of the United States.

8th. Navigation and Trade.

9th. American manufactures, may their utility increaſe and pervade the world.

10th. The arts and ſciences.

11th. Reformation to inſurgents.

12th. Our virtuous fair.

13th. The militia of the United States, may they be a wall of fire to her enemies, and of ſafety to her friends.

CHARLESTOWN, Nov. 5.

On Friday the 19th ult. The artillery company, commanded by captain William Calder, was paraded, when a detachment of the company headed by capt. lieut. Phillips, proceeded to Warren-Hall, in order to receive an elegant Standard, provided by a ſubſcription among the gentlemen of the town. Upon the ſtandard's being delivered by Samuel Swan, Eſquire, deputy-quarter-maſter-general, for the third diviſion, that gentleman addreſſed the corps in the following animated ſpeech:——

WHEN we conſider the citizens of this commonwealth, compoſing our militia, and under good military diſcipline, we feel the higheſt confidence in their ability and our ſafety, againſt every foreign and internal invaſion. When conſidering the diſcipline of the artillery company in this town, and your attachment to the laws of the land—a proof of which you gave during the campaign laſt winter, when you, with other troops, conducted by the intrepid Lincoln, drove rebellion and uſurpation forth from our borders—our hearts are rejoiced, and our proſpects are brightened.

Therefore, fellow-ſoldiers, I preſent you this ſtandard, in the name of the donors, as a token of our affection for your company; relying on your firmneſs to ſupport and defend it, with that honor and dignity which becomes every true republican, influenced by the noble principles of the new fœderal conſtitution.

PROVIDENCE, Nov. 1.

A correſpondent obſerves, that the general aſſembly of this ſtate have no right to refuſe calling a convention of the people, to conſider of the propoſed fœderal conſtitution,—as the people at large have a right to judge of the propriety or impropriety of adopting it, however the preſent members may be oppoſed to it.

NEWPORT, Nov. 8.

Laſt Friday evening the ſtore of Mr. Stephen Debois, of this town, was broken open, and robbed of 150 dollars in caſh, which the villains forced out of an iron cheſt that was depoſited there. The ſame evening two hats and a cane were ſtolen out of an entry. Too great vigilance cannot be paid in apprehending ſuch daring robbers, that they may ſuffer the demerits of their crimes.

A correſpondent obſerves that a lady's dreſs varies from time to time; but, we are ſorry to ſay, it ſeldom verges towards propriety. The beauty of women conſiſts not in the face, or if it did, that is almoſt entirely hid, but in the ſhape, and our modern dreſſes, whether introduced by faſhion or fancy, are calculated to deſtroy ſhape altogether; a lady dreſſed according to the height of the ton, may be worſhipped, without any breach of the ſecond Commandment, as ſhe is like nothing in the Heavens above, the earth beneath, or the waters under the earth!

Extract of a letter from Charleſton, South-Carolina, October 6, 1787.

"The grand ſecret is out and we have the new ſyſtem laid open for the examination of the public—In general I am much pleaſed to find it approved of—The ſentiments of our country party we have not yet heard, but in town flatter ourſelves it will meet the hearty approbation of the aſſembly.

"The Georgians have got into a hobble with the Indians, and for the firſt time I believe ſuch a thing has ever been known, the Indians fought in a fair open field an equal number of whites and made them retreat too with conſiderable loſs: each party had 150. and general Clarke, of Georgia, is wounded. The Indians would have killed every one, but that they thought Clarke had a body of reſerve, and retreated to lead them into an ambuſcade."

HARTFORD, Nov. 6.

By His Excellency
SAMUEL HUNTINGTON, Esq.
Governor and Commander in Chief of the ſtate of Connecticut.

A PROCLAMATION.

WHEREAS it hath pleaſed Almighty God, in the diſpenſations of his providence, the laſt year, graciouſly to beſtow upon the people of this ſtate, numberleſs favours and mercies, which demand our ſincere gratitude and thankful acknowledgments:

I have therefore thought fit by and with the advice of the council, and at the deſire of the repreſentatives in general court aſſembled, to appoint, and do hereby appoint, THURSDAY the fifteenth day of November next, to be religiouſly obſerved as a day of Public Thankſgiving throughout this ſtate; earneſtly exhorting miniſters and people of all denominations, to aſſemble themſelves for divine worſhip, and with becoming devotion to render ſincere praiſes unto Almighty God, the father of all mercies, for the various diſplays of his loving kindneſs; for the continuation of the bleſſings of peace; for our religious & civil privileges; the advantages of the goſpel and means of grace; for the general health enjoyed in moſt parts of the ſtate, and competent ſupplies of the fruits of the earth the current year; and for all his other innumerable mercies and manifeſtations of goodneſs. Alſo to offer up fervent ſupplications to the God of all grace, that it may pleaſe him to bleſs the fœderal council, in Congreſs aſſembled, and the people of theſe United States; inſpire their ſeveral councils with wiſdom and unanimity to diſcern and adopt the means to promote the proſperity and happineſs of the nation. That it may graciouſly pleaſe him to ſmile upon and bleſs the people of this ſtate; ſucceed a preached goſpel and means of grace, and cauſe pure religion to flouriſh abundantly, continue to us the bleſſings of peace, with the enjoyment of our civil and religious privileges; bleſs us in our huſbandry, trade, navigation and fiſhery, and in all the labour of our hands; proſper the means of education, and ſpread the ſavour of divine knowledge and uſeful literature; extend the peaceful influence of the Redeemer's kingdom over all nations of the earth, and fill the world with the knowledge and glory of God.

All ſervile labour is forbidden on ſaid day.

Given at the council chamber in New-Haven, the twenty ſecond day of October, in the twelfth year of the independence of the United States of America, annoque domini, 1787.

SAMUEL HUNTINGTON.

By his Excellency's command,
GEORGE WYLLYS, Sec'ry.

BALTIMORE, Nov. 13.

Laſt night the Old American Company gratified their friends—a liberal and generous audience, with the repreſentation of a new comedy intitled the Contraſt, written by a native of America. Theſe bloſſoms of the comic muſe, wear every mark of vigour, and are an additional ſpecimen in proof, that theſe new climes are particularly favourable to the cultivation of arts and ſcience. But independent of all metaphor and partial effuſions of a native, proud to praiſe the merit and laudable exertions of his countrymen, he can with great truth and juſtice boldly affirm, that this new comedy not only rivals the moſt celebrated productions of the Britiſh muſe in elegance of invention, correctneſs and ſplendour of diction, but particularly commands applauſe for the chaſtity of its morals, the happy application of political reflections, and above all, for that exuberance of attic ſalt prevailing in this comedy, and totally diveſted of thoſe obſcene ſuggeſtions which have ſo long diſgraced the ſtage in the parent country.

In the character of Colonel Manly, we contemplate at once the illuſtrious citizen, the gallant officer, and the patriotic and political philoſopher. In his fervent attachment to his country, he forgets all perſonal and ſelfiſh motives, and exhibits ſuch leſſons of reſignation and patience, as would do honor to the primitive fathers of chriſtianity. Licentiouſneſs and vice ſtand appalled in his preſence, particularly that infamy of principle to which youth, beauty and innocence, have too frequently been ſacrificed. In the character of Jonathan, our riſible faculties are irreſiſtibly ſet in motion without hearing an expreſſion to offend the moſt nervous and delicate feelings of a ſaint. In a word, the publication of this production, would prove in experience, a concluſive anſwer to all the objections againſt the ſtage, whether produced by the laudable fervour of the chriſtian philoſopher, or the ignorance and rancour of the enthuſiaſtic bigot.

As to the performers, foreigners pronounced every animated encomium on their reſpective exertions, and it appeared to me, that the comedy itſelf, or the numerous audience, or ſomething derived from their combined efforts, had communicated on this occaſion a degree of new inſpiration. It is, however, a tribute due to eminent merit, to advert to that general impreſſion which the efforts of Meſſrs. Hallam and Wignell, as well as Mrs. Morris, had made on the human mind; for, in a word, they may be truly ſaid to have exhibited a feaſt to the lovers and admirers of the Theatre, as well as precepts of toleration to its enemies.

SAVANNAH, October 11.

Thurſday laſt, in the Superior Court for the county of Chatham, Godfrey Hyde was tried for the murder of Mr. Burnſides, and found guilty. Next day Charles Weſtmore, alias Purcel, and John Stewart, were tried, and found guilty of counterfeiting the paper medium of South Carolina. They were all ſentenced on Saturday to be hanged the 27th inſtant.

James M'Niel and James Ray, for fraudulent practices in gaming, &c. ſtood on the pillory laſt Monday forenoon, purſuant to their ſentence.

Want of time and room prevents our publiſhing his Honor the Chief Juſtice's charge and preſentments of the Grand Jury this week; but one of the preſentments is of ſuch a nature as to demand the attention of the legiſlature, and therefore we give it a place in this day's paper; it is as follows:

Firſt. While we ſincerely ſympathize with our fellow citizens on the frontiers in the diſtreſſes they muſt unavoidably be involved in from the preſent hoſtilities with the Indians, and are determined to render them every ſupport in our power, we lament and execrate the cauſes among ourſelves (if any ſuch there be) which have contributed to bring on ſuch a calamity: and we earneſtly recommend it to the legiſlature to make a ſtrict inquiſition on the ſubject, and to have aggreſſors brought to condign puniſhment.

Philadelphia, Nov. 20.

This day is appointed for the meeting of the Convention elected by the people of this ſtate for the purpoſe of conſidering the propoſed Plan of Government for the United States.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY.

Thurſday, November 1, 1787. A. M.

Mr. M'Lene wiſhed to be allowed to introduce the reſolution he had in his hand. He was informed by the treaſurer, that there was expected to be in the treaſury about 10,000l. and if it was deſtroyed, it might give a ſpring to the paper money.

He read the following in his place and was ſeconded by Mr. Kennedy:

Reſolved, That the committee of accounts be, and they are hereby directed forthwith to count, burn, and deſtroy ſuch part of the bills of credit, of the late emiſſion, as may now be found collected into the treaſury of this ſtate, for the purpoſe of being deſtroyed, agreeably to the act of aſſembly, paſſed March 25, 1785.

Mr. Peters wiſhed to extend the motion, as he looked upon it to be imperfect; and to add thereto, that they be directed to deſtroy "all ſuch further ſums as may come in during this ſeſſion."

Mr. M'Lene. My view is to have the committee of accounts go into the buſineſs immediately; and I have no objection to the amendment.

Mr. Lollar expected the committee would continue to burn until the whole 20,000l. was deſtroyed.

Mr. Peters meant to have the reſolution, if it muſt be adopted, go that far; as it ſtood at preſent, they are directed only to burn what is now in the treaſury, which ſeems rather to bear down the power of the committee, by confining it in the manner expreſſed in the reſolution.

Mr. Fitzſimons thought the gentleman's object of giving a ſpring to the paper money, would be better effected if the reſolution prohibited the treaſurer from paying out any money until the 20,000l. was collected to be deſtroyed—he did not know what ſum was in the treaſury, but he ſuppoſed not ſufficient to make up the quantity ordered by law to be deſtroyed annually. He would ſubmit it to the gentlemen, whether ſuch an extenſion of the reſolution was not more likely to anſwer his purpoſe.

Mr. Lollar agreed with the member from the city, that it would be better, but queſtioned if a reſolution of the houſe was adequate to forbid the payment of ſums ordered to be paid by law—he did not know what ſum was in the treaſury, but he had learned ſome time ſince, that 10,000l. was expected by the treaſurer to be received about this time, and he apprehended the committee would find enough to employ all their vacant time, as the bills were a good deal defaced.

Mr. Peters wiſhed the reſolution to be amended in the manner propoſed; the member who introduced the motion acquieſced in the amendment, and it was made accordingly, but the words in Italic were eraſed, as unneceſſary.

Col. Hubley did not think there was any neceſſity for the houſe to adopt this reſolution, becauſe the law under which the paper money iſſued, was fully competent to its deſtruction, the method of which was clearly laid down, and the committee under that law might call at the treaſury, and burn all the paper that the treaſurer had prepared, without further directions from the houſe. It was not, he apprehended, a reſolution of the houſe that would quiet or ſatisfy the people on this head; nothing but actually deſtroying the money could have this effect, and he believed if the gentlemen would look into the law, that they would be ſatisfied the committee have all the powers to perform this duty, without the aid of a reſolution.

Mr. Fitzſimons read the clauſe of the law alluded to by col. Hubley, from which it appeared, that the treaſurer was ordered to reſerve, out of the money collected in duties and taxes, the ſum of 20,000l. annually, and to deface that ſum and report to the houſe, after which the committee of accounts are to examine, count, and burn the whole. Now it was well known to every member, that money enough to anſwer the various appropriations, was not received into the treaſury. So that either the claim of the individual, or the claim of the ſtate for 20,000l. annually, muſt remain unſatiſfied; the law directs the payment of certain ſums to various claims, which, if anſwered, will not leave any thing in the treaſury, while a great part of the duties and taxes remain outſtanding:—ſo that if it is deemed requiſite to give a ſpring to the money by burning this ſum, it muſt follow of conſequence, that the individuals muſt forego their demands for the preſent, as money enough to anſwer both purpoſes, it is well known cannot be obtained. The law directs equally a payment to them, and a reſervation of 20 000l. both cannot be complied with: and as for the reſolution it means nothing, for all the directions it contains are clearly ordered in the law.

Mr. M'Lene. We all ſeem to have the ſame object in view, and agree that ſomething ſhould be done, to favor the paper currency; there are duties and taxes to pay, out of which the 20,000l. is to be reſerved annually. I believe at preſent it is moſt material to attend to this object, and have that ſum deſtroyed. The method pointed out in the laws makes it neceſſary for the treaſurer to have reſerved that ſum, before he reports to the houſe; but I will leave it to any gentleman to ſay, whether waiting ſo long, will have as good an effect as proceeding immediately to deſtroy what may be collected, and now in the hands of the treaſurer; certainly it will not; therefore, I hope the reſolution will be agreed to.

The Speaker ſtated to the houſe that they had a committee on the ſubject of the paper money, appointed in conſequence of the notice taken of it by council in their meſſage, and ſubmitting to the gentleman whether it would not be better to let this reſolution go to the ſame.

Mr. Findley was on the committee alluded to by the Speaker, but the committee did not conceive that the preſent reſolution was in any wiſe attached to the object under their conſideration; they were of opinion that it was their duty to pay attention to it on new ground, and not to notice that part which relates to the burning.

Mr. Peters conſidered it totally unneceſſary to adopt the reſolution, as the committee of accounts would proceed to the burning, as a matter of courſe, whenever they find money is in the treaſury to begin with.

Mr. Lollar conceived the intention of the reſolution was to ſatiſfy the people out of doors; that proper meaſures would be taken, to comply with that part of the law, which orders 20 000l. to be ſunk annually, and they will believe us in earneſt when they find we have ſet about it. He apprehended it would be of great uſe to the paper, if the reſolution was adopted.

Mr. M'Lene could not ſee why the gentlemen ſhould oppoſe the reſolution; he was in hopes it would promote the circulation of the paper, and give a ſpring to it, for it is well known how hurtful the depreciation is to every claſs of citizens, it will reſtore their confidence, for at preſent the people had their doubts about the burning, but when they ſee it is deſtroyed, they will know their ſituation, and thoſe doubts will be relieved. But if the gentlemen are afraid this will be done too ſoon, I can't help it, tho' I am as able to bear my ſhare of the loſs and inconvenience as others.

Mr. Kennedy approved of the reſolution, and agreed with the gentleman who introduced the motion, that it would have a good effect, and give a ſpring to the paper money, this could not be done too ſoon, and he ſhould vote for the reſolution, becauſe if it did no good, it would do no harm.

Mr. Logan was on the committee of accounts, and it had been in the cuſtom of that committee, to perform their duty without any ſpecial directions; laſt year the object of the reſolution was accompliſhed without theſe directions; and he expreſſed his willingneſs to attend to this buſineſs, the moment he learned there was money in the hands of the treaſurer to be deſtroyed. The committee had already conſidered this ſubject, and meant to proceed to the burning immediately. He had ſent to the treaſurer and learned that a parcel was ready, and tho' it was but 1000l. he would chearfully dedicate his time to this buſineſs, notwithſtanding it was, as a gentleman had before remarked, a troubleſome work.

The queſtion was now taken on the reſolution, and unanimouſly agreed to.

At a meeting of ſubſcribers to the Manufacturing Fund of the Pennſylvania Society for the encouragement of manufactures and the uſeful arts, at the Univerſity, on Thurſday evening the 15th inſtant, in purſuance of public notice,

On motion, Reſolved, That the ſubſcriptions to the Manufacturing Fund be receivable either in the preſent paper currency of Pennſylvania, or in ſpecie, at the option of the ſubſcribers.

Reſolved, That the Manufacturing Committee be empowered to employ ſuch perſon or perſons as they ſhall think proper, and on ſuch terms as may be agreed upon by them, to collect thoſe ſhares that have been already ſubſcribed, or which may be hereafter ſubſcribed to the Manufacturing Fund; and that the ſame, when ſo collected, be paid into the hands of the treaſurer.

An Account how the Ginſeng is cured in Tartary.

SUCH as go in ſearch of this plant, take nothing but the root, and bury in one place as many of them as they ſhad during ten days of a fortnight; they waſh the root very carefully, and cleanſe it, by rubbing off with a bruſh every thing extraneous. They afterwards dip it for a moment into almoſt boiling water, and dry it with the ſmoke of a kind of yellow millet, which tinges the plant a little with its colour. The millet being put into a veſſel with a little water, is boiled over a ſlow fire, and the roots being laid on little pieces of wood put croſs-wiſe over the veſſel, dry by degrees under a piece of linen, or under another veſſel which covers them. They alſo may be dried in the ſun, or even by the fire: but though they then preſerve their virtue, they do not keep their colour, in which the Chineſe delight very much. When theſe roots are dry, they muſt be laid up in a very dry place, otherwiſe they would be in danger of rotting, or of falling a prey to the worms.

On the PUNISHMENT of DEATH,

From Monſ. Voltaire's Commentary on the Marquis Beccaria's celebrated Eſſay on Crimes and Puniſhments.

IT hath long ſince been obſerved, that a man after he is hanged is good for nothing, and that puniſhments invented for the good of ſociety ought to be uſeful to ſociety. It is evident, that a ſcore of ſtout robbers, condemned for life to ſome public work, would ſerve the ſtate in their puniſhment, and that hanging them is of no benefit whatever. In Ruſſia no criminal was executed during the whole reign of the autocratical Elizabeth. Catharine the ſecond, who ſucceeded her, with much more genius, follows her example: yet crimes are not multiplied by this humanity; and it generally happens, that the criminals they ſend to Siberia in time become honeſt people. We are aſtoniſhed at the change, and yet nothing can be more natural. The condemned are forced to continual labour for a livelihood. The opportunities of vice are wanting, they marry and multiply.—Oblige men to work, and you certainly make them honeſt; as nothing can be a greater enemy to morality than idleneſs and debauchery.

The Romans never condemned a citizen to death unleſs for crimes which concerned the ſafety of the ſtate. Theſe our maſters, our firſt legiſlators, were careful of the blood of their fellow citizens; but we are extravagant with the blood of ours.

The queſtion hath been frequently debated, whether a judge ought to have the power to puniſh with death, when the puniſhment is undetermined by the law: this queſtion was ſolemnly agitated in the preſence of the emperor Henry VII. who decreed that no judge ſhould have ſuch power.

There are ſome criminal caſes which are either ſo new, ſo complicated, and ſo unaccountable, as to have eſcaped the proviſion of the laws, and which therefore, in ſome countries, are left to the diſcretion of the judge. But for one caſe in which the laws permit the death of a criminal whom they have not condemned, there are a thouſand wherein humanity ſhould ſave whom the laws have condemned to ſuffer.

The ſword of juſtice is in our hands, but we ought rather to blunt than to ſharpen its edge. It remains within its ſheath in the preſence of kings, to inform us that it ought ſeldom to be drawn.

There have been ſome judges who were paſſionately fond of ſpilling human blood; ſuch was Jefferies in England, and ſuch in France was the man whom they called Coupetete. Nature never intended ſuch men for magiſtrates, but for executioners.

From the Maſſachuſetts Centinel.

A Political Dialogue.

Mr. Grumble.

SAD times! neighbour Union, ſad times!

Mr. Union. Why, what is the matter, neighbour Grumble?

Mr. Grumble. Why, all our liberties are going to be ſwallowed up; the whole country is in a confederacy to ruin us—I remember the glorious times when every man had a right to ſpeak what he thought.

Mr. Union. Why, who hinders you now?

Mr. Grumble. Who? why every body:——when this report of the Convention came to hand, I thought I would go and talk about it to my neighbours; ſo I went to the barber's ſhop, and taking up the paper, ſo, ſays I, it ſeems this monſter which is to devour the liberties of the people is come forth. Immediately the whole ſhop was in alarm—Mr. Razor's hand trembled ſo with indignation, that I thought he would have cut my throat; and the whole ſhop looked as if they did not care if he had. What's that you ſay, ſaid a ſturdy Ship-Carpenter, do you mean that I and my family ſhould ſtarve? Let's come at him, ſaid a Blackſmith, Painter, Rope-maker, Sail-maker, Caulker and Joiner—the Federal Conſtitution is the only thing which can ſave us and our children from ſtarving.—Out of the ſhop with the raſcal, ſaid half a dozen different tradeſmen. It was in vain I applied to a Merchant for protection, he aſſured me that for want of a Federal Government he had ſunk a fortune by importing cargoes under the ſtate impoſts, and was underſold by goods from Connecticut—and even my friend Simon Meek, the Quaker, who delights in healing quarrels, would not interfere, but coolly told me—"Friend Grumble, whilſt we are in the fleſh, we ſhould be obedient to the powers which may be ordained over us." In fine, I was driven from the ſhop in the plight of the Iſraelitiſh ambaſſadors. I ran with my complaint to our reverend Paſtor, who told me, that to be bound by this law of equity was perfect freedom, and bid me beware of the leaven of the Phariſees. The Doctor who tends my ſick child was in the ſame ſtory, and the honeſt man from the country, who brings me my winter's cyder, vowed it would have been right cute if they had kicked me out of the ſhop, for his town thought the new conſtitution was altogether up to the notch. In a word, every man I have converſed with has been ready to knock my brains out, if I ſaid a word againſt it—Do you call theſe liberty times?

Mr. Union. Well, but, neighbour, what are your objections to the new conſtitution?

Mr. Grumble. Why, as to the matter, I can't ſay I have any, but then what vexes me is, that they won't let me ſay a word againſt it—It ſhews, neighbour, there is ſome trick in it.

Mr Union. But, neighbour, this is indeed a country of liberty, and every man may ſpeak his mind, eſpecially on a ſubject which is preſented to you for your conſideration—but if all orders and degrees of people oppoſe your ſpeaking againſt this propoſed conſtitution, the concluſion is, that the whole people both ſee the neceſſity, and give their warmeſt approbation of it. And indeed, neighbour, it is no wonder, when we conſider the horrors of our preſent ſituation—the decay of our trade and manufactures; the ſcarcity of money; the failure of public credit, the diſtraction of our public affairs, and the diſtreſs of individuals, which have all ariſen from a want of this very Federal Government: it is no wonder, I ſay, if men who are ſo deeply intereſted ſhould not be able to ſit patiently, and hear revilings againſt the only remedy which can be applied with ſucceſs, to our preſent grievances.

No man is intended to be deprived of a freedom of ſpeech, but the few individuals who oppoſe the Federal Government, muſt not be ſurpriſed to find, that the Merchant and Trader, who have been ruined for the want of an efficient Federal Government to regulate trade, will reſent it; that the Landholder, who has been taxed ſo high, that the produce of his farm would ſcarcely pay its rates, will reſent it!——And out of the abundance of the heart, the long train of induſtrious Tradeſmen, who are now ſpending their paſt earnings, or ſelling their tools for a ſubſiſtence, will reſent it. Nay, the whole body of an almoſt ruined people will deſpiſe and execrate the wretch who dares blaſpheme the Political Saviour of our Country.

Proud billows roaring daſh,
Do thou, my ſoul, with faith abound,
The light'nings can but flaſh.

Some friendly port I yet may find,
Where anchoring ground will hold,
But never will my troubled mind
Brook ſlavery to behold.

My ſervice freely would I give,

But, oh! I cannot think to live,
And e'er be leſs than man.

Freedom, fair Goddeſs, ſhew thy hand,
And I will thee obey,
But, oh! I ſoon muſt leave that land,
When ſhe doth fly away.

O let me walk in truth's fair path,
Deſpiſe the ſcorner's laugh,
Born to contend with pride and wrath,
Yet heav'nly nectar quaff.

Fair Charity became my nurſe,
So ſoon as I was born,
The rage of faction ſhot its force,
And uſher'd in my morn.

Should death awake me into life,
With angels then I'll ſing,
Freed from a world of jarring ſtrife,
Enjoy a heav'nly ſpring.

ANECDOTE.

BY the gloomy and mercileſs diſpoſitions of the Spaniſh conquerors of South America, the very name of Spaniard became an object of execration to the helpleſs victims of their inſatiable fury. One of the chiefs of the iſland of Cuba, named Hatvey, who had with uncommon reſolution defended the liberties of his country, having been overcome and taken priſoner, was condemned to be burnt alive.—As the unhappy prince in conſequence of the doom thus cruelly and unjuſtly awarded againſt him, advanced to the fatal ſtake at which he was to expire, a Miſſionary exhorted him to embrace Chriſtianity, and aſſured him that, by this change of his religion, he would be admitted into Paradiſe.—"In this Paradiſe, of which you boaſt ſo much, are there any Spaniards?" demanded the chief. "Doubtleſs there are," replied the Miſſionary; "none however but good ones can enter it." "Worthleſs are the beſt of them," returned Hatvey. "On no account will I agree to go into a place where I ſhall be in danger of meeting with an individual of the Spaniſh race.——No more then of your religion, and let me die!"

PRINTERS,

RESPECTFULLY inform the Public, that they have now in the Preſs, an American Edition of an entirely new and highly approved Publication, entitled

Notes on the State of Virginia;

Written by his Excellency THOMAS JEFFERSON, Miniſter Plenipotentiary from the United States of America at the Court of France.

This WORK will be printed in a handſome Octavo Volume, on good Paper, with a new & elegant ſcabbarded Type, and ſhall contain about two hundred and fifty Pages. The Volume will be neatly bound and lettered, and delivered to the Subſcribers at the very low Price of 7/6, which is juſt half the coſt of the London Edition—To Non-ſubſcribers 9/ No Money to be received until the Book is delivered, which will be ſome time in January next.

THIS WORK, which has in Europe eſtabliſhed the fame of the Author, as a Philoſopher and a Man of Letters, will undoubtedly meet with the encouragement due to its merit from the Citizens of the American States, in whoſe ſervice thoſe talents have ſo often been diſplayed.

Though entitled Notes on the State of Virginia, his obſervations are not confined to that ſtate alone, but often refer to different parts of the United States, particularly thoſe ſituated on the Weſtern Waters; and under this unaſſuming title the philoſophical reader will find ample food for his curioſity, in a more perfect Natural Hiſtory of Virginia, and its neighbourhood, than has ever yet appeared.

In a word, all America knows Mr. Jefferſon; and we may venture to aſſure the Public, that the wiſdom of his political, and the depth of his natural and philoſophical reſearches, could be no where more perfectly exemplified than in theſe Notes on Virginia.

It is therefore hoped that the Encouragers of American Productions of this nature, will be ſpeedy in giving in their names to thoſe entruſted with ſubſcription-papers, which will be gratefully acknowledged by their humble ſervants,

P O E M

On the Prospect of seeing the Fine Arts flourish in AMERICA.

OH haste the day, on swiftest pinions haste,
When arts and manners shall adorn the waste;
When woods deserted, or where Indians rove,
Shall form the statesman's, or the poet's grove;
When streams that roll'd, for years, their course along,
Unknown to fame, to melody, or song,
Shall flow mellifluous, to th' harmonious strains
Of maids accomplish'd, and of polish'd swains!
Then shall content adorn the smiling plain,
Where peace and plenty are design'd to reign;
Commerce shall then her num'rous sails unfold,
And agriculture yield her stores of gold:
The foreign emigrant repose once more
Upon a civiliz'd, a tranquil shore:
Where chang'd the scene, from what the Bard (a) foretold,
His new abode shall far excel the old;
There no tornado's shall his rest invade,
Nor snakes insidious lurk within the shade;
The various terrors of the horrid shore,
To distant climates found dismay no more;
But sweets domestic shall his paths defend,
And all the virtues his retreat attend;
The cooling brook, the grassy vested green,
Around his dwelling, deck the rural scene;
And all the arts that minister to life,
Expel, for ever, party feuds and strife.

Sweet bard! the muse has oft rever'd thy zeal,
Thy generous ardour for thy country's weal,
That noble flame, which did thy bosom fire.
When from their fields thou saw'st the band retire;
Whose social merit, and domestic praise,
Thy pen has consecrate, in deathless lays;
But now behold, from heav'n's imperial bow'rs,
Where are the plains, more fortunate than ours?
Where is the nation bids more fair for fame,
Or can, with justice, higher honours claim?
Say, on what coast do men more freely share
The various blessings human life can bear;
Or where so little is oppression known,
From Zembla's regions, to the torrid Zone?

See quick approach that period of renown,
When poetry shall add her laurel crown;
To those rich honours, which our country grace,
And form the glory of her brilliant race.
When painting also with Promethean fire,
Shall deck her canvas, and her forms attire;
When architecture shall erect the dome,
Whose fame shall rival that of antient Rome:
When music's hand shall strike the silver lyre,
And marble, grace, from sculptures skill acquire.
Then shall Columbia's artists seek no more
For foreign smiles upon a foreign shore;
But here combine together, to display
The finish'd glories of her risen day!
But see what flow'rets we already claim,
What lovely harbingers of future fame:
Behold philosophy's (b) bright temple rise,
And (c) fanes to learning every where surprise;
What schemes of charity the soul excite,
To acts of bounty, and unmix'd delight;
Some to the gaol (d) with pitying steps repair,
To minister to woes that languish there:
Others (e) the bed of raging illness smooth,
And the worst pangs of human sorrow sooth;
Some to fair freedom (f) living altars raise,
And bid the negro celebrate her praise:
Others (g) the farmer, with their cares embrace,
And pay due homage to his useful race:
Some (h) manufactures and the arts protect,
Others, (i) humane establishments erect:
But cease the muse, the boundless tract t'explore,
Of all the joys which decorate our shore,
Which, fast encreasing, views of bliss supply,
That fill the prospects of the keenest eye.

Oh glorious prospects! how divinely fair,
Make them, ye patriots, your supremest care!
In fœderal laws (k) connect the wide domain,
And bind the union with a deathless chain!
But let the arts attend its earliest dawn,
Proclaim its rising, on the cultur'd lawn:
In sweet array its first approaches lead,
Grow with its growth, and with its strength proceed:
So shall the universe applaud your fame,
And nations, foes till now, your friendship claim:
For "self-dependant pow'r can time defy,
"As rocks resist the billows, and the sky."

But chiefly you, ye fair! whom heav'n decrees
To charm, to soften, captivate and please;
To you belongs the pencil and the lyre,
The taste to fashion, and the soul t'inspire,
The sad to chear, the thoughtless to restrain,
To urge the timid, and to check the vain:
Great is the pow'r of these engaging arts,
To guide the passions, and to conquer hearts:
These are the spheres of your supreme controul,
Who seek to lead and elevate the soul
From low pursuits, and from desires uneven,
To peace, to joy, to harmony, and heav'n.

Oh then, neglect not music to acquire,
So form'd to cherish the celestial fire,
To fan devotion, friendship to improve,
And woo the mind to innocence and love:
Wide let its influence o'er the world extend,
And what it cannot conquer strive to mend:
Spring let it welcome, summer sports endear,
Delight the autumn, and the winter chear:
So shall the year to harmony be given,
And earth be found the proto-type of heav'n.

If in some fatal unexpected hour
Your wealth should vanish, or your prospects lower,
How sweet the warblings of the tuneful lyre,
The hope to cherish, that might else expire:
Still in your cottage give to music place,
And let it check the tear that soils the face!
Oh think how fleeting life, its woes not long,
Then calm their throbbings with a chearful song;
So death shall bear your patient minds away,
To realms of endless bliss, of endless day!
But if propitious fortunes on you shine,
Add to their lustre all these arts divine:
Oh let them humanize and sway the breast,
Which often hardens, where no griefs molest:
So shall like pity close your dying eyes,
And cherubs waft you to their native skies.

AN officer of the guards having come without leave from Potsdam to Berlin, to be present at a masquerade, the King of Prussia, who was also there (incog.) accosted him, and, after some conversation, asked his name. The officer without hesitation told him; but added with energy, whispering, "I desire you will keep this a secret." In the course of the evening, the officer discovering that he had made himself known to the King, retired in haste to Potsdam, dreading the consequence: but a few days after, on his majesty going thither, he called the officer to him, on the parade, and told him, "You are made a Captain, but (whispering) I desire you will keep this a secret." Every person was desirous of knowing what the King had said, but the officer was obliged to be true to his trust—and it was a year before the King relieved him from the weight of it, when he sent him a Captain's commission, and a present of one hundred rix-dollars.

BOSTON, November 8.

The British ministry are so anxious to encrease their whale fishery that a bounty of 2000l. is paid to the most successful Brazil ship in every season.

Says a Correspondent—

Besides the securities for the liberties of the people arising out of the fœderal government, they are guarded by their state constitutions, and by the nature of things in the separate states. The governor or president in each commonwealth, the councils, senates, assemblies, judges, sheriffs, grand & petit juries officers of militia, clergy and lay officers of all churches, state and county treasurers, prothonotaries, registers, presidents and other officers of universities, colleges and academies, and many other officers of power and influence, will still be chosen within each state, without any possible interference of the fœderal government. The separate states will also choose all the members of the legislative and executive branches of the United States. The people at large in each state will choose their fœderal representatives, and, unless ordered otherwise by the state legislatures, may choose the electors of the president and vice-president of the union. And lastly, the legislatures of the states will have the election of the senate, as they have heretofore had of the members of Congress. Let us then, with a candour worthy of the subject, ask ourselves, whether it can be feared, that a majority of the representatives, each of whom will be chosen by six thousand enlightened freemen, can betray their country?—Whether a majority of the senate, each of whom will be chosen by the legislature of a free, sovereign and independent state, without any dispositions in favor of wealth, or the contemptible distinctions of birth or rank, and who will be closely observed by the state legislatures, can destroy our liberties, controuled as they are too by the house of representatives?—or whether a temporary limited executive officer, watched by the fœderal representatives, by the senate, by the state legislatures, by his personal enemies among the people of his own state, by the jealousy of the people of rival states, and by the whole of the people of the union, can ever endanger our freedom?

NEW-YORK, Nov. 10.

Last evening the Rev. Mr. Murray, minister of the Universal Gospel, preached in the city-hall in the presence of a numerous and very respectable audience: and to-morrow morning at 10 o'clock, he will again perform divine worship in the same place.

BALTIMORE, Nov. 13.

On Friday last, the pupils of the Baltimore Academy, had an exhibition at the old theatre, where they delivered from the most approved authors, several elegant and humourous pieces in prose and verse, which gave great satisfaction to a numerous and respectable audience. The propriety, emphasis and manner of some of the young gentlemen, were justly admired, and many of their friends expressed their suprize and entire approbation of the performance.

Andrew Ellicott, Esquire, professor of mathematics in this academy, is daily expected from the western country, where he has been employed during the last summer in determining the boundary-lines between the states of Pennsylvania and New-York. On his return, young gentlemen may be taught, as usual, a general course of mathematical institutes.

On Saturday afternoon, the ordinance of Baptism, by immersion, according to the mode of the Baptist church, was administered by the Reverend Mr. Richards, to two of that persuasion, in Ridgely's cove. A numerous company attended, and their pastor delivered a judicious discourse on the occasion, explaining the reasons of their conduct in admitting none but adults and believers to this institution; and that immersion was the practice of the primitive church.—The whole was conducted with that decency and seriousness as must have convinced the spectators of a different way of thinking, that they were not ashamed (which is too much the case in this age) publicly to take upon them the awful and important profession and obligations of the religion of a despised redeemer.

CHARLESTON, Oct. 30.

We learn from Georgia, that martial law is proclaimed throughout that state—that the town of Savannah is strongly fortified by several redoubts and other works thrown up round it—and that small parties of Indians have committed depredations within 36 miles of Savannah.

On the 21st inst. died at Waccamaw, after a short illness, Dr. James Gilchrist, a young gentleman whose pleasing appearance and fine accomplishments, endeared him to all his acquaintance.

AUGUSTA, October 20.

Extract of a letter from a gentleman in Greene county to his friend in this town, dated Oct. 4.

"On Tuesday the 2d inst. as a small party from Wilkes county were on their way to relieve a party at the Scull Shoal station, they were fired on by about the same number of Indians, by which three whites were wounded, and one horse killed. The savages immediately fled to an adjacent cane-brake, and upwards of 40 men appeared on the ground within two hours after the skirmish, but could make no further discovery.

"About the last week in September, 30 horses were stolen from Barnet's fort by the Indians, three of which have since returned with their bells stopped, which circumstance induces us to believe that the aggressors are still in this neighbourhood. Several evacuated forts have been lately burnt, viz. Landers's, Philips's, Fitzpatrick's, and Greensborough, with all the houses in the vicinity of that place, and many of those near the river. There is likewise a deal of fencing burnt, a very considerable quantity of corn cut down, and many flocks of hogs entirely destroyed by the savages. I do not suppose there any large parties of Indians on this side of the Oconee, near us, but am induced to believe, from the frequent firing of guns, and other corroborating circumstances, that they are in large bodies on the south bank of the Oconee.

"I blush when I tell you that the people on the frontiers, complain very loudly against a late party from Wilkes, commanded by col. Williamson, who rather destroyed than preserved our little prospect of support, by turning full troops of horses among our standing corn, destroying our fodder, and throwing down fences, &c. This kind of treatment from our fellow citizens, added to the ravages of a savage enemy, makes our case as frontier settlers desperate. I will not trouble you with any further accounts of our distress."

SAVANNAH, October 25.

Letter from the Hon. William Pierce, Esquire, to Don Diego de Gardoqui.

New-York, Sept. 3, 1787.

DEAR SIR,

I spoke to you some time ago, respecting a complaint made by many people in Georgia, against the inhabitants of East-Florida, for protecting and refusing to deliver up certain runaway negroes belonging to some of the citizens of that state. I, at that time, was not sufficiently informed of the circumstances to address you in my public capacity; but since then I have seen a letter from our chief justice Osborne, and a presentment of the grand jury of Camden county, (a copy of which I herewith enclose) that make it proper I should ask for your attention to the correction of an abuse which, if not timely checked, may interrupt the harmony that ought to prevail between Spain and the United States.

There are certain abuses which nations contiguous to each other are ever liable to, and ought by both parties to be carefully watched over and guarded against as much as possible.

I know full well your disposition to preserve a good understanding between the two nations, and the alacrity with which you would undertake any thing not inconsistent with the interest and dignity of your own country, to prevent any unfriendly or unneighbourly act taking place between the subjects of his Catholic majesty and the citizens of any part of our republic.

Under this persuasion I am led to hope, that you will employ the earliest opportunity to make such information to the department where the evil can soonest be checked, as you may think adviseable; and that through your interference every cause of complaint may be removed.

I have the honor to be, sir, with very much esteem and respect, your most obedient and very humble servant,

WILLIAM PIERCE.

His Excellency Don Diego de Gardoqui,
Encargado de Negotios of Spain.

New-York, Sept. 24, 1787.

DEAR SIR,

By my secretary I informed you of my sudden departure for Philadelphia, which deprived me of answering your esteemed 3d instant as soon as I wished.

I now do it, assuring you that nothing will give me greater pleasure, than that of contributing to the harmony, welfare, and perfect good understanding of your states and my country.

I have the extract of the presentments you enclosed me, but give me leave to tell you I have now by me the same sort of complaints from our governor at Augustine, and even of a stronger nature—of two of our sailors being detained on your side, and refusing to deliver them up. Such, and many others, may be expected on both sides, from want of a good arrangement of all matters between the two nations.

I came to this country for this laudable purpose; I have been in it two years and an half, and you must be well informed that no delay has been occasioned by me.

I shall, however, make with pleasure the proper use of your letter and extract, to bring our commander on your frontiers to the most friendly understanding with your state, and shall feel happy if my interference removes every cause of complaint.

I have the honor to be, with great esteem and regard, dear sir, your most obedient and most humble servant,

JAMES GARDOQUI.

Hon. William Pierce, Esq.

Extract of a letter from a gentleman in Sunbury to his friend in this town, dated the 24th.

"We had a man scalped the other day within 18 miles of this, and the house and crop of a planter near the Altamaha burnt down last Saturday. Works will be thrown up round us in a day or two, and five or six pieces of cannon mounted."

November 1. The honorable the house of assembly of this state, we are informed, have recommended the electing of delegates to a convention, for taking under consideration the new federal constitution, on the first Tuesday of December next, at the same time that members are chosen for the general assembly.

Saturday last Charles Westmore and John Stewart were executed on the south common, pursuant to their sentence, for counterfeiting the paper medium of S. Carolina. They both behaved in a manner becoming men in their unhappy and awful situation. The former declared, that they had never passed or signed a counterfeit bill of the currency of the aforesaid state: and before he left the prison, we are informed, he told the Rev. Mr. Lindsay, that his name was Martin, and not Purcel, or Westmore, by both of which he had at different times passed.

Kelly, who was taken up and confined with the above two men, but saved his life by turning state's evidence, was on Saturday last again committed to gaol, for being concerned with them in coining counterfeit dollars, the mould for which was found in his possession.

The execution of Godfrey Hyde, for the murder of James Burnsides, which was to have taken place the 27th ult. is respited till the legislature (to whom a petition in his favour, signed by a number of citizens, has been presented) shall make a farther decision thereon.

Extract of a letter from Rhode-Island, dated the 7th instant.

"By the papers now forwarded, you may form some idea of the politics of this state; from the proceedings of our legislature last week, you may reasonably conclude that our rulers have not yet completed their diabolical schemes; how far they mean to carry their vile plans, time alone must make known. A viler and more abandoned set of beings never disgraced any legislative, judicial or executive authorities since the fall of Adam. Every conscientious and honest man in our devoted republic is employed in contemplating with admiration, and devoutly wishing for the speedy adoption of the NEW CONSTITUTION;—though their fears are occasionally on the alarm from the ill founded suggestions of a G-r-y, and the more sly insinuations of your SIXTEEN seceeding members; performances too well adapted to blow up the flame of dissention and to embitter the minds of the people against all good and virtuous government. God grant that there may be wisdom and goodness enough still found among the majority to adopt, without hesitation, what a WASHINGTON, a FRANKLIN, a MADDISON, &c. so warmly recommended.——Without this adoption, a civil war I am afraid will take place—this must arise from the present confusion of our different state governments.

"The proceedings of the Baptist association lately convened at New-York, are highly approved here. Their brethren throughout the eastern states, are also highly fœderal—May all other Christian denominations evidence the same zeal in cordially recommending and fervently espousing a firm, vigorous, and well established government, so admirably calculated for the preservation of our dear bought liberty, civil and religious."

At a meeting of the Board of Managers of the Pennsylvania Society for the Encouragement of Manufactures and the useful arts, held at the Dispensary on Friday, November 16, 1787, it was Resolved, That this board will confer the following premiums.

1. 8. To such person as shall exhibit on or before the 31st of December, 1789, the best specimens of Pennsylvania made earthern ware, approaching the nearest in quality and usefulness to the delft, white stone, or queen's ware, a Plate of Gold, &c. of the value of twenty dollars.

MANNERS.

IT is difficult to determine on the standard by which the manners of a nation may be tried, whether catholic or particular. It is more difficult for a native to bring to that standard the manners of his own nation, familiarized to him by habit.—There must doubtless be an unhappy influence on the manners of our people produced by the existence of slavery among us. The whole commerce between master and slave is a perpetual exercise of the most boisterous passions the most unremitting despotism on the one part, and degrading submissions on the other. Our children see this, and learn to imitate it; for man is an imitative animal. This quality is the germ of all education in him. From his cradle to his grave he is learning to do what he sees others do. If a parent could find no motive either in his philanthropy or his self-love, for restraining the intemperance of passion towards his slave, it should always be a sufficient one that his child is present. But generally it is not sufficient. The parent storms, the child looks on, catches the lineaments of wrath, puts on the same airs in the circle of smaller slaves, gives a loose to his worst of passions, and thus nursed, educated, and daily exercised in tyranny, cannot but be stamped by it with odious peculiarities. The man must be a prodigy who can retain his manners and morals undepraved by such circumstances. And with what execration should the statesman be loaded, who permitting one-half the citizens thus to trample on the rights of the other, transforms those into despots, and these into enemies, destroys the morals of the one part, and the amor patriæ of the other. For if a slave can have a country in this world, it must be any other in preference to that in which he is born to live and labour for another: in which he must lock up the faculties of his nature, contribute as far as depends on his individual endeavours to the evanishment of the human race, or entail his own miserable condition on the endless generations proceeding from him. With the morals of the people, their industry also is destroyed. For in a warm climate, no man will labour for himself who can make another labour for him. This is so true, that of the proprietors of slaves a very small proportion indeed are ever seen to labour. And can the liberties of a nation be thought secure when we have removed their only firm basis, a conviction in the minds of the people that these liberties are of the gift of God? That they are not to be violated but with his wrath? Indeed I tremble for my country, when I reflect that God is just: that his justice cannot sleep for ever: that considering numbers, nature and natural means only, a revolution of the wheel of fortune, an exchange of situation, is among possible events: that it may become probable by supernatural interference! The Almighty has no attribute which can take side with us in such a contest. But it is impossible to be temperate and to pursue this subject through the various considerations of policy, of morals, of history natural and civil. We must be contented to hope they will force their way into every one's mind. I think a change already perceptible, since the origin of the present revolution. The spirit of the master is abating, that of the slave rising from the dust, his condition mollifying, the way I hope preparing, under the auspices of Heaven, for a total emancipation, and that this is disposed, in the order of events, to be with the consent of the masters, rather than by their extirpation.

Bordentown Academy.

THE subscriber takes this method to inform the public, that he still continues his Academy open at Bordentown, and that having supplied himself with a good tutor, means to increase his school to about thirty pupils, having formerly confined himself to a smaller number, being confident that he and his assistant can fully do their duty by them. The branches that are taught in his academy are reading, writing, arithmetic, the Latin, Greek and French languages, practical mathematics, geography, with the use of the globes, and the arts and sciences in general. He has in said Academy a good library and philosophical apparatus, for the use of his pupils; so that gentlemen may have their children fitted either for any particular class in college, or their education finished with him. He pays a particular attention to rhetoric and oratory, and flatters himself that he has turned out some good speakers, so necessary in our republic. He provides board, washing, lodging and every necessary accommodation, either in his own house, or in a genteel family, who accommodates part of his pupils. The exceeding healthiness and pleasantness of the situation, together with the ready communication with both the cities of Philadelphia and New-York, render it the most eligible spot on the continent for a seminary of learning. As there will be a vacation during the month of October, such gentlemen as wish to send their sons had best apply to him at Bordentown, either by letter or otherwise, during the time of vacation, that they may enter when the school commences on the first of November, as he cannot admit any more when his number is compleated. Those gentlemen who confide their children to his care may depend upon every attention being paid by

Mill Stones & Boulting Cloths,

FOR SALE BY

Robert Lewis & Sons,

At their Stores and Mill-Stone Manufactory, On the fourth Wharf below the Drawbridge, and next to Levi Hollingsworth's,

BURRS of excellent quality, just imported from France, and are now manufacturing into mill stones of all sizes and dimensions which may be ordered, by a complete workman from England, and warranted at least equal in quality, and low in price, as those imported from Europe. Directions will be given (if required) for laying out the quarters, and dressing them to the best advantage, according to the temper of the stones

COLOGNE MILL STONES (commonly called CULLINGS) imported from Holland; a few of different sizes.

COUNTRYMADE ditto, from the American rock, of every usual size, or any other that may be ordered, the best grit for merchant or country work, either to run together, or work with a French Burr or Cologne, ever yet experienced in this state.

Warranted Boulting Cloths.

A very extensive and compleat Assortment, lately imported from the manufactories, suitable to every branch of the boulting business; which are to be disposed of at the same low rates as they were sold before the revolution, at the stores abovementioned, or at ROBERT LEWIS's dwelling house in Spruce street, three doors from Third street. MILLERS and others may be furnished with cloths of superior quality and texture to any we have hitherto known imported into America: those who are unacquainted with this very difficult and precarious article, may rely on being supplied with such cloths as will certainly answer their purposes; provided they attend to directions for affixing them on the reels, in the most advantageous manner to perform the work intended; which will save the trouble and expence of returning cloths of an inferior kind, which are frequently sold in this and the neighbouring states.

ACCOUNT of a very extraordinary PERSON in NORTH-CAROLINA.

From "A Tour in the United States of America."

By J. F. D. SMYTH, Eſquire.

AT a fine ſettlement, called Nuthuſh, from a creek of that name, I fell into company with one of the moſt ſingular perſons and eccentrick geniuſes in America, and perhaps in the world.

His name is Nathaniel Henderſon: his father, who is ſtill alive, a poor man, reſides in this ſettlement, where the ſon was, at this time, on a viſit.

The latter was grown up to maturity, without having been taught to read or write; and he acquired thoſe rudiments of education, and arithmetic alſo, by his own indefatigable induſtry.

He then obtained the inferior office of conſtable. From that he was promoted to the office of under-ſheriff. After this, he procured a licence to plead as a lawyer, in the inferior or county courts, and ſoon after in the ſuperior or higheſt courts of judicature.

Even there, where oratory is brilliant as in Weſtminſter Hall, he ſoon became eminent: his ſuperior genius ſhone forth with great ſplendor and univerſal applauſe.

He was, at the ſame time, a man of pleaſure, gay, facetious and pliant: nor did his amazing talents, and general praiſe, excite him a ſingle enemy.

In ſhort, while yet a very young man, he was promoted from the bar to the bench, and appointed aſſociate chief juſtice of the province of North-Carolina.

Even in this elevated ſtation his reputation continued to increaſe.

But having made ſeveral large purchaſes, and having fallen into a train of expenſe, that his finances could not ſupport, his extenſive genius ſtruck out a bolder track to fortune and fame, than any one had ever attempted before him.

Under pretence of viewing ſome back lands, he privately went out to the Cherokee nation of Indians, and for an inſignificant conſideration (only ten waggons, loaded with cheap goods, ſuch as coarſe woolens, trinkets, ſome fire arms, and ſpirituous liquors) made a purchaſe from the chiefs of the nation, of a vaſt tract of territory, equal in extent to a kingdom; and, in the excellence of climate and ſoil, extent of its rivers, and beauty of its ſituations, inferior to none in the world. A domain of no leſs than 100 miles ſquare, ſituate on the back or interior part of Virginia, and of North and South Carolina; comprehending the rivers of Kentucky, Cherokee and Ohio, with a variety of inferior rivulets.

This tranſaction he kept a profound ſecret, till he had obtained the final ratification of the whole nation in form. He then immediately invited ſettlers from all the provinces, offering them land on the moſt advantageous terms, and propoſing to them likewiſe to form a legiſlature and government of their own; ſuch as might be moſt convenient to their particular circumſtances of ſettlement. And he inſtantly vacated his ſeat on the bench.

Mr. Henderſon by this means eſtabliſhed a new colony, numerous and reſpectable, of which he himſelf was actually proprietor as well as governor, and indeed legiſlator alſo; having formed a code of laws, particularly adapted to their ſingular ſituation and local circumſtances.

In vain did the different governors fulminate their proclamations of outlawry againſt him and his people: in vain did they offer rewards for apprehending him and forbid every perſon from joining, or repairing to his ſettlements; under the authority of a general law, that renders the formal aſſent of the governors and aſſemblies of the different provinces abſolutely neceſſary to validate the purchaſe of any lands from the Indian nations. For this inſtance, being the act of the Indians themſelves, they defended him and his colony, being in fact as a barrier between Virginia, as well as North and South Carolina, and him; his territory lying to the weſtward of their nation.

I beg leave to obſerve, that I do not preſume to undertake his juſtification, but only to admire his enterpriſing policy, and the vigour and activity of his mind.

Foreign Intelligence.

UTRECHT, September 10.

THIS moment we have received intelligence, that a courier from Berlin is arrived at the Hague, who has brought a definitive declaration, according to which, the ſtates of Holland are ſummoned to render, within four days, complete ſatisfaction to the princeſs; and, in failure, the troops of Pruſſia are to march upon the territory of the republic, and to enforce this requiſition.

The following demands are alſo contained in this declaration.

1. That the ſtates of Holland aboliſh and caſhier all the armed burgeſſes of their province, as well as the volunteers.

2. That they immediately, and without delay, re-inſtate the prince of Orange in all his rights, prerogatives and privileges which he enjoyed formerly, and eſpecially the command of the garriſon at the Hague.

3. That the ſtates of Holland caſhier all the new military corps which they have raiſed, and that the officers whom they diſmiſſed ſhould be reſtored to their places.

4. That they ſhall immediately requeſt the princeſs of Orange to return to the Hague, and allow her to be ſole mediatrix in reforming certain abuſes which have been committed.

We are likewiſe informed, that as ſoon as theſe points were ſtated, M. Thulemeyer intended to leave the Hague, and go to Nimeguen or Berlin; our information goes likewiſe to ſay, that theſe demands were drawn up by the duke of Brunſwick, in concert with the ſtadtholder's court.

In conſequence of the above, which was ſent to the grand penſionary, all the colleges of the provinces were immediately aſſembled, and meſſengers of ſtate were ſent to all the abſentees, requiring their immediate attendance.

Sept. 12. The commiſſion eſtabliſhed by the ſtates of Holland for the common defence of their province and the city of Utrecht, has been authoriſed to purſue every meaſure, they may judge proper for preventing an invaſion, and for that purpoſe to have recourſe, if neceſſary, to inundating the country.

The patriotic camp ſtill continues in the diſtrict of Weſtland, being employed in diſarming the Orange faction.

Baron de Capelle, colonel of the body guards, is appointed by the ſtates of Holland commander in chief of the regiments of cavalry of Heſſe Philipſtall.

The ſtates of Holland have given orders for tranſporting to Delft all the warlike ſtores in the magazines of Wondrichem, Henſden, Loeveſtein and Clandert. This precaution is taken on account of its being apprehended that an hoſtile enterprize would be attempted in this part of the province.

A report has prevailed for two or three days that the patriots of Friſeland have rendered themſelves maſters of Leuwarden. We have no confirmation of this very intereſting rumour, which, if true, will greatly alter the aſpect of the affairs of the ſtates general.

By order of the ſtates of Holland, the burgeſſes of the Hague have received notice to convey to the town-hall all the cartridges with which the inhabitants had reſpectively provided themſelves. Tho' this order was iſſued in the moſt poſitive and authoritative language, great numbers of the burgeſſes attached to the cauſe of the ſtadtholder, refuſed compliance, and we are aſſured are determined to proteſt againſt the proceedings of the ſovereign aſſembly.

The critical moment is at length arrived, for the ſtates of Holland muſt now convince the world whether they prefer the yoke of the moſt humiliating ſlavery, to the glory of defending their independence and liberty, and of periſhing, if that muſt be, rather than ſuffer themſelves to be intimidated by propoſitions, the tyranny and injuſtice of which are ſo clearly evident.

HAGUE, September 11.

According to the laſt authentic advices from Vienna, the Ottoman Porte had declared war againſt Ruſſia. Another account ſays, that on the 2d of Auguſt it was only about to be declared, and that the comte de Choiſeul had with ſome difficulty obtained it to be ſuſpended for a few days, during which time it was hoped he might effect the diſmiſſion of the grand viſior who was eager for the war. Mr. Cailliard, ſecretary to the French embaſſy at the Hague, is appointed charge d'affairs in the abſence of the marquis de Verac, and was preſented a few days ago to the ſtates general by the marquis juſt before his departure.

AMSTERDAM, Sept. 16.

We learn from Hoorn, in North Holland, that on Friday the 7th inſt. the burghers depoſed nine of the council of that city, who, during more than a year and a half had abuſed the aſcendancy, they had gained over their colleagues in office, and diſhonored the city by their reſolutions paſſed in council, and memorials addreſſed to the ſtates of Holland. The offices thus vacated were immediately ſupplied by eight brave citizens, whom the burghers have advanced to the dignity of counſellors.

FRANKFORT, Auguſt 26.

On the 26th of laſt month M. Blanchard made his twenty-ſixth æroſtatic experiment at Straſbourg; he aſcended from the citadel, and paſſed over the Rhin Hehl as far as Linx, being three leagues, in the ſpace of twenty minutes.

CONSTANTINOPLE, July 4.

The prince Conſtantine Maruſi, who ſucceeded in the government of Moldavia, the unhappy prince Gika, aſſaſſinated by order of the Porte, has been exiled.—Some ſay that he brought this diſgrace upon himſelf, by having committed ſome indiſcretion againſt the adminiſtration of the grand viſior; others attribute it to his ardor to become hoſpodar of Wallachia. He is a prince who poſſeſſes all the talents neceſſary for being inveſted with that charge; but he is of ſo violent a diſpoſition, that it is ſuppoſed he would cauſe extreme prejudices againſt him.

PARIS, Auguſt 24.

It is not without cauſe that the Pariſian populace is ſo incenſed againſt the comte d'Artois. One reaſon, and that certainly not the leaſt, aſſigned by a private correſpondent, is expreſſed in theſe words, in his letter of the 24th inſtant:

"This degrading affront, ſays he, alluding to the inſults offered to his royal highneſs, the prince highly deſerves from his unpopular conduct in various aſſemblies, eſpecially at the late Bed of Juſtice, when aſſiſted by the females Polignac, he openly ridiculed the parliament then preſent; ſaying, "My brother is too good; for the value of half a crown, I could ſoon ſilence their debates, and put a ſtop to all their oppoſition." "How ſo, with ſo little money?"—"Enough to buy rope ſufficient to hang them all." Such were, it is ſaid, his expreſſions, which certainly favor much more of the tyrant than the prince and the gentleman."

The ſame letter adds, that an unfortunate individual was ſo cruſhed by the mob in the late riot, that he died ſoon after. His only crime, it ſeems, was to appear in public with the inſignia of the prince's houſhold. This accident has occaſioned an order by which perſons wearing his royal highneſs's livery are forbid appearing in the ſtreets of Paris.

Sept. 1. The tumults begin to ſubſide—the precautions of multiplying the guards, and peace officers, have averted the dangers of fire, threatened by placards fixed in various quarters of the city.

The diſcontent of the people has been carried even to the gates of the palace. An affiche was poſted up at Verſailles, in which the King and Queen, the comte d'Artois, and ſome of the miniſters, were ridiculed as Buffoons in a new Opera, to be performed that day, called Le Pot Tres Pourri.

On the 22d of Auguſt, the parliament had its firſt meeting at Troyes, by virtue of letters patent, brought them from the Procureur-General. The reſult was, that the aſſembly perſiſted in its original reſolutions—reſerving to itſelf power to deliberate on the ſubject of the Lettres de Cachet, addreſſed to each individual—and ordered that the princes and peers, and members not at Troyes, be written to and invited to their deliberations, which were to be reſumed the 27th, on the adminiſtration of M. de Calonne.

September 14.

Tranſlation of the ARRET, or PROCLAMATION of his Majeſty's Privy Council, regiſtered at Verſailles on the 2d of September, which annuls the Reſolutions that paſſed in the Parliament of Paris the 7th, 13th, 22d, and 27th of Auguſt, 1787.

THE king having been informed, that notwithſtanding his majeſty's bed of juſtice, held at Verſailles, the 6th of laſt Auguſt, where an edict ſuppreſſing the two-twentieths and the four ſous per livre, and eſtabliſhing a territorial ſubſidy (land-tax) and a ſtamp duty had been regiſtered, his parliament had dared the very next day, Auguſt 7th, to declare, in the preſence of all the courts aſſembled, that the regiſtering of the ſaid acts was illegal and null. Whence it might appear that the courts had a power to reform or alter the edicts iſſued by the monarch, to deprive them of their eſſential force by different interpretations. And whereas the ſaid parliament, not ſatisfied with ſuch ſcandalous irregularity, had tried to perſuade the people on the 13th ult. that if the members of their aſſembly did at any time regiſter arrets for duties or taxes, it was only done with a view to oblige his majeſty, declaring at the ſame time, that the king had no power whatever in that reſpect; that parliament could receive none from his majeſty; that his error had continued too long; and that for the future it would not be in his power to obtain any ſubſidies without previouſly convening the general aſſembly of three ſtates. This was certainly done with an intent to avail themſelves of the preſent circumſtances, and to force him to call an aſſembly; but this privilege belongs to his majeſty alone, he being the only judge when it is neceſſary to have the ſaid aſſembly convened. It muſt appear very ſtrange indeed, and hardly credible, that officers on whom his majeſty has condeſcended to beſtow their titles, ſhould come to the bold reſolution of thus attacking his ſacred power, and exciting his ſubjects to emotions and broils, under pretence of examining and diſputing the bounds of royal authority; refuſing at the ſame time to examine the contents of the edicts that are laid before them, and by this unjuſtifiable conduct calling in queſtion his majeſty's unalterable attachment to truth and juſtice.

The king, therefore, convinced that proper reflection would bring parliament to their duty, has taken no other method than that of giving them an opportunity of re-conſidering it themſelves, by ſeparating them from that fermentation they had excited and fomented in this populous capital.

His majeſty no doubt has a right to determine the place where he thinks proper to have juſtice adminiſtered in his kingdom, and to change the reſidence of the parliament whenever he pleaſes.

His majeſty moreover is not ignorant that the officers of his parliament, in regiſtering the letters that transferred the ſeat of juſtice to Troyes ſince the 22d ult. proteſted in an open manner, and perſiſted, in the eyes of the nation, that they had certain rights and privileges independent of the king's authority, with the power of exerciſing their functions, without his permiſſion, in any of the places where his majeſty ſhould think proper to ſend them.

All theſe irregular proceedings have been enforced by their reſolution of the 27th ult. far more injurious than all others to the royal authority, and more indecent and unbecoming in its expreſſions, inaſmuch as the parliament forget themſelves ſo far as to declare Government capable of "reducing the French monarchy to a ſtate of deſpotiſm, of diſpoſing of his majeſty's ſubjects by Lettres de Cachet, of their properties by beds of juſtice, of civil and criminal affairs by removing cauſes arbitrarily to higher courts, or by a noli proſequi, and of ſuſpending the courſe of juſtice by partial baniſhments, or deſpotic removals:"—Parliament not ſatisfied with having regiſtered ſo falſe and bold a declaration, had dared to ſend it to inferior courts, as if they were in duty bound to execute its contents, or adopt the dangerous principles illegally inſerted in it. This proteſt, and before unheard-of reſolution, was ordered to be printed on the very day it paſſed the houſe, and likewiſe to be ſent to the reſpective juriſdictions within 24 hours; which precipitate manner of acting proclaims that it was accompanied by doubts ariſing from an abuſe of delegated power. His majeſty is conſcious that this new doctrine lately adopted by parliament, is contrary to their own conſtitution, and encroaching on the king's authority; that the ſuppoſition, repugnant to all common principles, of their having a right to declare illegal and null two edicts enacted by his majeſty's order, has very much diminiſhed in the eyes of the people the obedience due to the ſovereign; and that, according to the laws of the realm, all parliaments are bound to ſubmit to the 26th article of the 12th of November 1774, againſt which none ever dared to remonſtrate. The paragragh contained in the ſaid article regiſtered by parliament runs thus:—"Whenever it ſhall pleaſe his majeſty, after proper anſwers being given to the remonſtrances of his parliaments, to have ſome of his arrets, orders, edicts, declarations, and letters patent, regiſtered and publiſhed in the preſence of perſons charged with his orders, nothing ſhall ſuſpend the execution of ſuch arrets, orders, &c. and his attorney general ſhall be bound to ſend them to all the ſeats of juſtice in the kingdom, there to be publiſhed and properly executed."

In virtue of the 22d article of the ſame year, his majeſty, it is true, permits the members of parliament, after having regiſtered the arret, to convey their objections or remonſtrances to the throne, but without preventing or ſuſpending the execution of his orders in any manner, or under any pretence whatever. His majeſty could never imagine that his officers would forget the preciſe diſpoſitions of a law, that has ſucceeded their reſtoration to the higheſt rank of adminiſtering juſtice; and it is his duty to check and prevent ſuch daring attempts, equally derogatory from the laws and the reſpect due to his royal will; it is his intention to put an end immediately to a ſcandalous abuſe of power from a body of men who can never pretend to have a ſhare in the royal authority, but for the ſake of affording it a more efficacious ſupport. His majeſty, therefore, declares null and void the ſaid reſolutions of the 7th, 13th, 22d, and 27th of laſt Auguſt, as illegal, and prejudicial to his authority, contrary to the laws, and the reſpect due to his will, tending to divert the people, who ſhould learn ſubmiſſion from parliament, from that obedience the ſovereign is entitled to. The ſaid parliament's officers are hereby ſtrictly enjoined, under pain of diſobedience, not to continue to enter or publiſh any reſolutions, or proteſts of the kind; and all juſtices, magiſtrates, or other perſons in office thereunto belonging, to deſiſt from executing any of the ſaid parliament's orders. The preſent arret ſhall be properly enforced by all the juſtices of peace, and other magiſtrates, printed and publiſhed wherever it ſhall be found neceſſary, ſignified to the chief clerk of parliament, and notified to the attorney general.

The king of France has at length agreed to recall the parliament of Paris. This meaſure was reſolved on in conſequence of an interview between the French king, and the preſident of the parliament on the 13th inſt. The king then aſſented to the impoſts which he had inſiſted on being withdrawn, and to give every ſatisfaction to the parliament, who have agreed to regiſter the patent which appoints the archbiſhop of Thoulouſe to the title of "Firſt Miniſter of State."—It was expected the parliament of Paris would leave Troyes laſt Monday, aſſemble at Paris on Wedneſday, and receive the king's permiſſion to retire for the holidays on Tueſday.

Monſ. le comte de Brien, brother to the archbiſhop of Thoulouſe, is appointed miniſter of the war department.

NEWBURYPORT, Nov. 7.

By Capt. Young, lately arrived at this port from Bonaviſta, we have received the following notification, with a deſire to make it public, for the benefit of the mercantile part of the community.

The ſubſtance of the above is, "That in December next the Governor will build a large ſtore at the landing place of Bonaviſta, for the reception of ſalt—and will likewiſe provide a ſuitable boat to put the ſalt on board any American veſſel that may come there for a cargo. This he thinks will not only make the greater diſpatch in loading, but materially affect the price in favour of the purchaſer of the ſalt."

PITTSBURGH, Nov. 3.

On Saturday laſt the party of volunteers which went in purſuit of the Indians returned without having come up with them; they had got two days march a-head. At the Salt Licks the Indians attacked captain Robins, who with a few men, and a quantity of goods, was proceeding to the Moravian towns. The party was ſleeping in a ſmall hut built by Mr. David Duncan, and one of them having occaſion to out in the night, was ſtruck on the head with a tomahawk, this alarmed the reſt, who immediately got up, and after firing a few ſhots, diſperſed the Indians, and returned to this town. The wounded man is in a fair way of recovering.

Philadelphia, Nov. 22.

Yeſterday ſixty-one members of the Convention met at the State Houſe, and choſe for their Preſident the honorable Frederick Auguſtus Muhlenberg. No other buſineſs was done, except the adjournment until nine o'clock this morning.

Late London news-papers adviſe, that notwithſtanding the late menacing inſtructions of the emperor of Germany to his general, count de Murray, it is aſſerted, he hath conceded every thing to the wiſhes and deſires of his Brabantine ſubjects—that in this, however, he has ſtill retained the language of their king, but their repreſentations are eſſentially complied with, and they are ſo fully ſatiſfied, that the ſtrongeſt demonſtrations of joy have been exhibited in all the Auſtrian Netherlands—that previous to this happy event, every man in that country, from the age of 16 to 60 and upwards, was a volunteer, by which it was computed they could at once bring into the field 60,000 fighting men—that the reſiſtance of the parliament of Paris, aided by the unanimous and ſtrong voice of all the others, had at length prevailed, the language of the French court becoming every day more conciliatory, and leſs dictatorial—that the ſuperior and middling ranks of people in France had determined not to ſubmit to the impoſition of the taxes—that in the provincial parliaments the ſame ſpirit reigned, and that the populace had threatened to maſſacre the members, if they ſhould comply with the king's orders; and offer to ſupport them with their lives and fortunes, if they refuſe to regiſter the edicts.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY.

THURSDAY, November 15.

THE committee appointed for the purpoſe, reported a bill entitled, "An act for the relief of Thomas M'Intire, James Young, Anthony Baſtide, and Charles Buzelot, inſolvent debtors, confined in the gaol of the city of Philadelphia," which was read; and on motion and by ſpecial order, the ſame was read a ſecond time.

Mr. Fitzſimons declared it was a very unpleaſant thing to oppoſe an act of mercy, yet he thought in a country where the laws were ſo lenient towards debtors, that few applications need come before the legiſlature, as particular laws were not only improper, but almoſt unneceſſary. If the committee had ſtated any thing to the houſe to ſhew the neceſſity of the preſent bill, he had been abſent at the time, as he did not remember any thing on this head, he would therefore call upon them for information; but there appeared among the names mentioned in the bill (though he was perſonally unacquainted with them all) one that was very little deſerving the attention of the houſe; he had heard his character from report only, and might be altogether miſinformed—but if what had been related to him was true, the houſe would hardly judge it proper to intereſt themſelves for ſuch a perſon: It was Mr. M'Intire, who if report ſpeaks true, has injured an honeſt man very ſeverely, and abuſed the confidence of his worthy friend. The houſe muſt be well ſatisfied that the man deſerves their mercy before they extend it to him, to the greater injury of the gentleman who is already a ſevere ſufferer by his miſconduct.

Mr. Will apprehended the others being old caſes, and reported on at the former ſeſſion, that the houſe were well acquainted with them, and ſatisfied of the propriety of interfering. In the caſe of Mr. M'Intire, he ſtates his preſent ſituation to be occaſioned by ſome heavy and unforeſeen loſſes, as well as the failure of another perſon who has injured him, ſo much as to render him incapable of making payment to his creditors; he is willing to deliver up all his property on oath as an inſolvent, but he cannot come under the bankrupt law, as the debt for which he is confined, was contracted before that was paſſed.

Mr. Peters thought as much juſtice was due to the creditor as lenity to the debtor. The perſon objected to he knew but little of; he had known him during the war, and that he exerted himſelf in favour of the American cauſe; it was this, that induced him to preſent that perſon's petition; he knew nothing of the circumſtances of his debts, but if it appeared that he had been guilty of immoral practices, to the injury of his creditors, he conceived the houſe ought to take time to ſatisfy themſelves on this head—and if they are found well grounded, the man deſerved puniſhment, but if they are nothing more than reports, the houſe will not refuſe him that lenity which he may be deſerving of.

Mr. Fitzſimons was totally unacquainted with the man, and had only heard from general report, the circumſtances which he had related; the particulars of which were, that this man was entruſted with a conſiderable ſum of money, I believe 10,000 dollars, by a gentleman in New-Orleans, to inveſt in a certain manner which was directed—inſtead of applying the money as preſcribed to him, he entirely neglected it, firſt went to Europe and afterwards to India. On his return here, the creditor ſent a perſon to him, but he could obtain no ſatisfaction, though he had a great property with him at the time.

Now if the money is really ſpent, and the property gone, I agree with the committee that it is of no uſe to keep him confined, and if it is only to extend the inſolvent act to him, I ſhall not object.—But really the number of bankrupts which every day ſtain our public news-papers, and the prodigious number who have recourſe to the act of inſolvency, and are liberated at every court of common pleas, I think ſhould make the legiſlature tenacious of extending lenity further than what merely related to the perſon of the debtor, if it operated to deſtroy the property of the creditor; he did not mean to be particular in this caſe, if the man had really no property left.

Mr. M'Lene thought it would be better to publiſh this bill without Thomas M'Intire's name, becauſe if the reports that had been mentioned were well founded, the houſe would not diſcharge him—and if his name was printed in the bill and eraſed on the third reading, it might wound his feelings; nor would he add diſtreſs upon diſtreſs: if the report was unfounded, his name might eaſily be added hereafter, and it is beſt to err on the ſide of clemency.

Mr. Kennedy was of opinion that there was no occaſion to ſtrike out his name, becauſe theſe things were reported on hearſay only; his name might go out, and if it was true as reported, his creditors might come forward and confront him.

Mr. Peters thought alſo it was right to let the name ſtand for the reaſon juſt mentioned; for his part he did not wiſh to hurt the feelings of any man, but if the man is guilty of the crime ſuppoſed, he deſerves to have his feelings wounded.

Mr. Lewis. I am againſt the propoſed amendment, ſir, as ſtated by the honorable gentleman from Franklin. Our conſtitution and humanity both require, that the perſon of an unfortunate debtor ſhall not be confined in goal, after he has relinquiſhed to his creditors all the property he has acquired. Thomas M'Intire, with ſeveral others, I find have applied to this houſe for the liberation of their perſons. The committee who were appointed to make report, have enquired into their caſes, and we have no right to ſuppoſe they have been more deficient in the performance of their duty on this occaſion than any other. They have made report to the houſe, that they find the prayer of the petitioners both reaſonable and juſt, and therefore proper for us to grant. A bill ſince has been brought before us, and we are deſired to ſtrike out the name of one perſon; let me aſk upon what ground is the amendment propoſed? is it becauſe a member has heard that this man is a bad man? I apprehend it is, ſir; but is this vague and uncertain report equal, nay ſuperior to the report of your committee, who I ſay made full enquiry conſonant with their duty? it is alſo feared, that if his name ſhould be publiſhed in the bill, and be hereafter ſtruck out when his creditors come forward and demonſtrate to you that he is the practiſing and artful villain, then it may tend to hurt his feelings; if, ſir, he is ſuch a character, I care not how much his feelings are hurt; but if he is not, and I am inclined to believe he is not, or your committee would not have recommended him to us, how are you to act after eraſing his name? Will his creditors know any thing of his application for releaſe, if the bill is publiſhed without his name? and can they come forward to ſhew the impropriety of liberating him if they have objections; or to ſhew the truth of the facts alledged if they are facts? The committee have further informed you, ſir, that the man cannot avail himſelf of the bankrupt act, becauſe his debt was contracted before it was paſſed, and that law having no retroſpect, cannot provide for his relief. The benefit of the inſolvent laws cannot be adminiſtered unto him, becauſe the debt far exceeds 150l. nor can he ſerve a notice upon the creditor as enjoined by that law, becauſe his creditor lives in a diſtant country. From all which circumſtances, it muſt be clear to every gentleman that he ſtands beyond relief from any exiſting law. If the bill goes forward with his name in it, we ſhall afterwards be able to decide on his caſe in ſuch a manner, that our duty and juſtice may require; but if his name is omitted the evidence againſt him cannot come before us, and the ſame objection will lie on any future application; from which conſiderations, I hope, ſir, the amendment will be negatived, and the bill be publiſhed as it now ſtands.

Mr. Fitzſimons. My worthy colleague tells you, ſir, that the committee have given you information of having made the neceſſary enquiry, and therefore recommend the perſon to your attention; if this is the caſe, ſir, I ſhall by no means object to the bill going forward as it now ſtands; but have the committee mentioned their having called the creditors forth, or given them notice to meet, and heard them on the ſubject; if they have ſtated ſuch matter, I am ignorant of it, and ſhould be glad to hear it repeated.

Mr. Will. The committee reported fully after hearing the creditors of the other three, but the creditor of Thomas M'Intire is in a diſtant country, and could not be heard.

Mr. Fitzſimons apprehended the creditor had ſome perſon here, who as an agent or attorney could throw ſome light on the ſubject.

The queſtion on ſtriking out the name of Thomas M'Intire was put and negatived.

Mr. M'Lene objected to three weeks being the term that the debtors ſhould advertiſe for the appearance of their creditors, before the court of common pleas, as he ſuppoſed the creditors could not hear of the application by that time.

Mr Will conceived if the houſe meant to relieve theſe perſons, that they would do it before an advertiſement could reach the Eaſt-Indies and return.

The bill without further debate was agreed to, and ordered to be tranſcribed and publiſhed for public conſideration.

A correſpondent remarks, that the confuſion which prevails in Europe will afford a happy opportunity for a deliberate review of the general circumſtances of the United States, and the expediency of adopting the plan of government offered to their conſideration.

Another correſpondent thinks, that the embarraſſments of Europe might be rendered highly advantageous to this country, if a ſtrong and efficient government were eſtabliſhed. The Dutch, who have hitherto been the common carriers of the world, are principal actors in the drama, ſo that America would have no rival in her marine neutrality, by which ſhe might effectually eſtabliſh her domeſtic manufactories, and render the contending nations contributory to her wealth and dignity.

In the ſtate of the finances delivered to the committee of ways and means, the Comptroller General wiſhes a ſummary power were given to the collectors to diſtrain for taxes, and that ſome means were provided to bring them to a ſpeedy account, as he ſays it is found difficult to get the juſtices to do their duty, and even after the money is collected, there is no way to compel the officers to pay it over to the treaſurer, but the common proceſs of law, which occaſions a very great and prejudicial delay.

We hear that his Excellency General Waſhington has conſented to repreſent the county of Fairfax, in Virginia, in the ſtate convention of that commonwealth, which is to take into conſideration the new federal government.

It is to be wiſhed, ſays a correſpondent, that our Aſſembly would attend to the 36th ſection of the conſtitution of the ſtate, which contains the following paragraph.—"As every freeman, to preſerve his independence (if without a ſufficient eſtate) ought to have ſome profeſſion, calling, trade or farm, whereby he may honeſtly ſubſiſt, there can be no neceſſity for, nor no uſe in, eſtabliſhing offices of profit, the uſual effects of which are—dependence and ſervility unbecoming freemen in the expectants—faction, contention, corruption and diſorder among the people;—and whenever through increaſe of fees or otherwiſe, an office becomes ſo profitable as to occaſion many to apply for it, the profits of it ought to be leſſened by the legiſlature."

On Tueſday an argument of great importance to the mercantile intereſt was agitated in the Common Pleas. The caſe was briefly this:—One of two partners in trade became inſolvent, and a ſeparate commiſſion of bankrupts was taken out againſt him, the other partner being, during the whole tranſaction, in good and ſolvent circumſtances. On this caſe the queſtion aroſe, whether the commiſſioners under the ſeparate commiſſion were entitled to receive and diſtribute the joint ſtock of the partners,—or, whether the ſolvent partner was entitled to retain and appropriate it to the uſes of the company? It was admitted by the counſel, and declared by the court, as an undoubted axiom, that joint eſtate is firſt reſponſible to joint creditors, and ſeparate eſtate is firſt reſponſible to ſeparate creditors—but, it ſeems, that on this occaſion, the commiſſioners claiming all the intereſt of the inſolvent partner in the joint eſtate, thought they were entitled to make the diſtribution, while the ſolvent partner contended, that as he was perſonally anſwerable for the company debts, he ought to poſſeſs the fund out of which thoſe debts were payable. The apparent equity of the caſe in favour of the latter poſition gave occaſion to a remark from the court, that the execution of the bankrupt law muſt be extremely defective till a controuling juriſdiction ſimilar to the chancellor's in England, was here eſtabliſhed, ſince it was left generally to the commiſſioners to proceed as they pleaſed, and upon an appeal to the common law, the courts were bound by general technical rules, which might, in particular caſes, prevent the adminiſtration of juſtice. The forms of inſtituting an action created ſome difficulty in the preſent inſtance, and it was acknowledged by the counſel, that the moſt diligent reſearch had not enabled them to find a precedent for aſcertaining who ought to be made parties to the ſuit, to recover the partnerſhip debts—a ſilence in the law that evidently proceeds from the interpoſition of the chancellor, who directs in every reſpect the proceeding under the commiſſion, upon a conſideration of the particular circumſtances of each caſe. No judicial determination took place on the queſtion before the court.

Safe hid beneath thy circling ſphere,
Unſeen by mortal eyes,
The mingled heap of greaſe and hair,
And wool and powder lies.

From the grey head ſhould pad and tête,
And loads of horſe hair fall,
Fear not the looſe, diſorder'd pate,
CALASH will hold it all.

ANECDOTE

Of the celebrated French Author MARMONTEL.

WHEN Marmontel was a ſchool boy, his maſter having chaſtiſed him for ſome youthful offence, he wrote ſo ſevere a lampoon upon him, that he was under the neceſſity of running away. Being afraid of returning to his parents, he entered himſelf as a private ſoldier in a regiment commanded by the preſent Prince of Condé; and in the year that he obtained a halbert, this celebrated poet wrote his charming Hiſtory of Beliſarius. Many applications have been made for his diſcharge, which the Prince has always withſtood, declaring it to be the moſt flattering honour he can poſſibly receive, to have ſuch a man as Marmontel a ſerjeant in his regiment. Once a year, at the general review, this diſtinguiſhed character appears in his proper ſtation, and multitudes innumerable crowd to ſee him. After the review is over, Marmontel has always the honour to dine with his illuſtrious Colonel, and the principal officers of the army, by whom he is eſteemed a moſt welcome gueſt.

Ten Dollars Reward.

RAN AWAY about 8 o'clock laſt night, an indented NEGRO MAN named WILL. He is ſtrong built, about 5 feet 9 inches high, ſtoops a little, ſpeaks very good Engliſh, but has not a clear voice, fond of pleaſure and company, has a long ſtanding cough, though not very violent, was born in Bucks county, and was lately a ſlave to Mr. Alexander Allair. He took with him an old brown cloth coat with buttons of the colour, and a light coloured ſuperfine cloth coat with pearl buttons pierced in ſtars, and having four ſmall buttons on each ſleeve, a black cloth waiſtcoat, a white ſwanſkin ditto with gilt buttons, a fine ſilk ſhag and ſattin ſtriped Mancheſter waiſtcoat, a fuſtian ditto, a pair corduroy breeches, a pair of nankeen ditto, two white ſhirts, a cocked beaver hat, thread ſtockings, plated ſhoebuckles, a pair of gloves, a pair of womens ruffles, and probably ſome other articles. Whoever will deliver him to the ſubſcriber ſhall receive the above Reward.

TENCH COXE.

He is ſuppoſed to have gone to ſea.

Will be expoſed to Sale by Public Vendue, on Thurſday the 29th of November next, at the Court-Houſe in Harford county, ſtate of Maryland,

TWO very valuable and well-improved FARMS, late the property of Henry Wilſon and Son, about two miles and a half from the Court-houſe, 24 miles from Baltimore, 9 miles from Joppa, and 8 miles from a landing at Otter-Point, near the Bay. The two farms together contain 929 acres, but will be divided nearly equal. One half the land is cleared, the remainder in timber; about 60 acres of meadow made, and about as much more may be cleared, and a large proportion of the whole may be watered at a ſmall expence by ſeveral ſprings, and a conſiderable run, that flows through the centre of the land: the winter's run likewiſe flows through a part of it, on which is a mill ſeat. There is on each farm a good brick houſe, with barn, ſtables, &c. a large orchard ſtocked with the beſt fruit, and a large garden paled in. The ſituation is high and healthy, the ſoil good for either farming or grazing: they are convenient to ſeveral merchant mills, where there is a conſtant market for all kinds of grain.

Thoſe who wiſh to view the land, on application to Meſſ. Aſhton and Waters, the preſent tenants, will be ſhewn it. Poſſeſſion will be given the 1ſt of January, if required. The title good and free of all incumbrances. The terms will be eaſy to the purchaſer, and will be made known on the day of ſale by Wm. WEST.

Foreign Intelligence.

FERRARA, August 2.

THE 26th of last month, about a quarter after eight in the morning, was felt here a shock of an earthquake, much stronger than that we experienced on the 10th. It was accompanied with an uncommon noise, and threw entirely down several buildings, which fortunately were empty, so that no person's life has been lost on this alarming occasion. We do not learn that either of the shocks extended very far beyond the limits of this place. The Cardinal Archbishop has ordered public prayers to Heaven for the divine protection of the inhabitants.

LONDON,

July 24. The following melancholy accident happened at Staughton in Huntingdonshire a few days ago:—The church bells being ringing during a thunder storm, the lightning fell upon the fane of the steeple, and descending into the belfrey, killed three of the ringers on the spot: two others were struck speechless, but are likely to recover.

August 22. Tuesday the Pitt East Indiaman arrived at her moorings at Blackwall. In her coming up the river, the following curious accident took place.—A monkey, who had been frightened by one of the officers belonging to the ship, got into the cabin, and unpacking one of his boxes, took out a piece of silk, and threw it into a custom-house officer's boat, which was at that moment alongside the ship—the officer received the present with great alacrity. The above circumstance may be relied on as a fact.

Sept. 1. The following is said to be a genuine copy of the Letter, which was written by the eccentric Thomas Stone to a certain Great Personage:

To our Gracious Queen, CHARLOTTE, Mistress of Great-Britain and its Appendages.

" Madam,

" WHEN I tell you that I am in a state of mental distraction, occasioned by the peculiar excellencies of your eldest daughter, I hope that you will pardon this presumption—Happy would I be, if my birth and circumstances could entitle me, legally, and according to the sanctifications of prudence, to demand the illustrious object of my passion; but as we are not responsible for our coming into this world, whatever we may be for our actions after that entrance, you must not blame me for not being a branch of the first house in Christendom. To come to the point—I have seen the Princess Royal; and must assure you, that the brilliancy of her beauties in the assemblage surpasses even the honors of her situation.—Though matrimony, in the present day, according to the ideas of Hudibras, is made a mere matter of money, I reject so mean an idea; my affections are rivetted to the object of my desires, independent of the advantages that may be presumed to be attached to her exaltation. It is true, that my estates at present are somewhat incumbered—but what of that?—the purity of my desires will operate an antidote against the evils of property; I leave it to your discretion to mention the affair to his majesty; if you approve of the measure, I can have no objection. There is an old saying, that marriages are made in Heaven; so, if this matter takes place, your majesty knows, that the whole affair must be placed to the account of the Omnipotent, and not to the frail desires of a weak individual. Should Hymen illumine my being with his torch of connubial splendour. I flatter myself that we may live a very happy couple. In expectation of your majesty's speedy answer,

I remain with the most perfect veneration,
Your much obliged, most dutiful,
and devoted subject and servant,
THOMAS STONE.

August 14, 1787.

" P. S. My dutiful and respectful compliments to his majesty and all the royal family. I hope soon to have the honor of approaching you in a less equivocal character."

From the extraordinary letter which the above unhappy person had written to the queen respecting the princess royal, it was thought necessary to apprehend him; and his person being known to the Bow street people, one of them was sent to Windsor, where, on Wednesday last, Stone set off with the design of visiting the royal family. He stopt at Brentford, and in the morning walked off with an intention of going to Windsor, to know the reason why he had not answer to the proposal; but meeting with his majesty on horseback, he returned and followed the king to Kew; here the unhappy man was apprehended, and taken into custody by the soldiers. Macmanus was sent for, who brought him to town, and he was taken to Mr. Nepean's office. The person at whose house he lodged in the city was sent for. No particular examination has at present taken place, he is now in Tothillfields Bridewell, till further examination is made after him. Orders were sent to Mr. Fenwick to treat him with every prudent indulgence.

Stone is a Dorsetshire man, was brought up an attorney, and has an uncle a man of property, of the name of Sutton, living in Islington. He wrote a letter to Mr. Delaval, of Pall Mall, saying, he proposed a plan for paying off the national debt, and this is the reward of his labour, to be sent to prison, and to have his property seized.

His conversation is truly that of a lunatic; he says, his heart was stole from him three years ago, and till last March he did not know who was the robber, till being at the play, he saw the princess royal look up at the two shilling gallery, and there he discovered the possessor of it. Upon being asked if he should know her, he said no; but he was going to Windsor to take her. A great many papers, on the subject of love, were found upon him, addressed to " Her Serene Highness the Princess Royal." Stone is a heavy looking man, about 33 years of age: he was articled to his uncle Sutton at Islington, but did not stay above two years at the profession; and has been observed to behave in a very strange manner lately by his landlord where he lodged. His father is a floor-cloth painter.

The luxury of the present age beyond the preceding ones, may be judged of by the following circumstance; Louis XVI. makes a merit with his people, in the reducing of his carriages to something less than fifty; Henry the Fourth, between whom and the present monarch there have been only three intermediate sovereigns, kept only one coach, insomuch, that on a particular occasion, when it had been his intention to visit Sully, who was indisposed, he apologized for not being able to do it—that the Queen had requested the use of the carriage!

Of the Dutch who have wisely taken care of the main chance, and came along with it to England, Mr. Hope, of Amsterdam, is one.

The Hopes bring along with them, which people look well on—great property, and much character of all kinds. But besides this, they have other ties to this country in their near relationship to all the Murkhams. The archbishopess is their cousin-german—Her father, Mr. Goddard, was a partner in the house at Amsterdam.

Sept. 3. Accounts from Cadiz say, that two more large ships have lately arrived in that port from South-America, with silver bars and specie, quicksilver, drugs and other articles, to a very considerable amount.

The French king having intimated that the number of societies of late established in Paris, under the name of Clubs (a-la-mode Anglois) were prejudicial to the public, and dangerous to the state, as in their nature generating too much of licentious liberty; orders were accordingly given to the lieutenant of the police, totally to suppress every meeting of the kind. So that his Christian majesty appears not only determined to force his parliament from the usual place of assembly, but even to deprive his subjects in general of the invaluable comforts of harmless society.—But, his word, though absurd, must be law.

Two thousand five hundred Recruits are to be sent out by the ships of this season to the several presidencies in India.

Sept. 6. The following intelligence from Paris, our readers may depend on to be authentic, as coming from the highest authority:

" The city not only wears a scene of cabal and distrust, from the arbitrary measure the king has been advised to take in banishing his parliament from Paris, but the greatest confusion at this moment exists in the interior government—and suspicion seems to dwell, more or less, in every man's bosom. Those who are supposed to be most in the secret, appear the most uneasy at what may follow."

Our information concludes with the following words:—" The present moment is big with great events; the most thinking look forward to a new system of affairs, but they have to fear that government will rather involve the nation in a war, than allow the minds of the people to brood over the discontent which universally prevails. In the mean time, the king appears to labour under much disquietude."

The exile of the French parliament will in all probability end in the disgrace of the archbishop of Thoulouse, who is a man too honest for the office of prime minister. It is only by this or some similar sacrifice that the monarch can escape, for the parliaments have great influence. All the justice of the country is suspended by the shock and public opinion, which in France with all their attachment to monarchy, is is a thing which no king can successfully resist, is against the strong measure now taken.

That a great part of the present distresses of the French court is owing to the secret pecuniary aids given to the emperor by his sister the queen, we believe has been made manifest, and may account in some measure for the good condition in which the emperor's army is now found to be. It is said that not less than 15,000,000l. has been covertly sent to India.

The Dutch affairs still remain wrapt up in mystery, so that it is at present impossible to say whether they will terminate in war or peace. Several accounts say, that a fresh skirmish has happened; others that such a blow has been struck, which cannot fail of being decisive for war; and in this they assert, that much praise is due to the spirit and address of the ministry of Great-Britain.

On the 17th ult. died at Helmsley, in Yorkshire, Mr. Daniel Snowdon, of Harum, many years a speaker among the Quakers. Although he was in his 94th year, he has lately walked twenty miles a day, and perfectly retained his faculties to the last.

The rich banker, Hafeur d'Inbachthausen, died at Saltebourgh, on the 25th of June, leaving 800,000 florins in pious legacies, and 400,000 others: the day of his burial there were distributed to the poor 13,744 florins, in conformity to his will.

Sept. 11. The cause of the sudden recall of the marquis de Verac from the Hague, it is said, was his having suffered his private dispatches to be betrayed by one Gilliard, to sir James Harris.

It is said in Paris, that the parliament is recalled. They expected its arrival on the 7th instant—Another strong report is, of the recall of M. de Brantzen, one of the Dutch ministers, but from no imputation of neglect or infidelity.

On the departure of the last courier from Bourdeaux, the Cathedral of that city, a fine Gothic edifice, was on fire, and it was apprehended, that it would be reduced to ashes.

September 14.

Extract of a letter from Paris, Sept. 3.

" The whole of the administration united in the hand of a prime minister, gives room for hope that from a deeper and more exact examination into affairs, which were formerly too much divided and dispersed, a new and better order of things will be the result.

" M. de Barienne has already laboured with success in rendering the Caisse d'Escompte a security, which appeared to have been affected by the crisis of the moment.

" The multitude which were eager to have their paper realised into money, are now dispersed, and the administrators of that bank sent a deputation to Versailles on Thursday last, to thank the minister for his services.

" The main body, as well as the public, express great regret for the loss of the Marechal de Castries; the important services rendered by him in that department ensure him the lasting gratitude of the nation.

" On Friday M. C. compte R. de Dillon, being at the chace with the duke of Bourbon, had four of his fingers carried away by his fuzil which burst in his hand—it has since been cut off at the wrist."

While the University of Oxford was assembled for the purpose of presenting lord Heathfield (gen. Elliot) with an honorary degree, it was for some time a doubt what degree they should give his lordship, when an eminent dignitary of the church very pointedly replied, " Why, we must make him a Doctor of Cannon Law to be sure!"

Trent-Place, the seat of the late Sir Rich. Jebb, Bart. was yesterday noon sold, at Garraway's Coffee-house, by Mr. Spurrier.

On this estate, Sir Richard had laid out no less than 20,000l. and indeed the land alone—to say nothing of the house, which, tho' small, is extremely elegant and convenient—the land alone was well worth that money.

Yet this estate, so beautiful and extensive, was sold—mirabile dictu!—for the very moderate sum of 4100l.

A tolerable judgment of the spirit of the Parisian populace may be formed from the following circumstance.—A man went about a week ago, to the Caisse d'Escompte, and producing a Louis d'or, said, " Here, give me livres for this foolish piece:" He was immediately apprehended for having insulted his majesty; but the people who got information of it, assembled about the house, and insisted that the man should be delivered. An officer of the police was sent for, who, in conjunction with the captain of the guard, immediately set the prisoner at liberty, who was carried away upon the shoulders of the populace.

A gentleman during his stay at Bassora, had purchased a very curious Mummy. As the box that contained it was rather too large for his travelling post chaise, being arrived at Auxerre, he sent it by the stage coach. The latter was searched according to custom, at the gates of Paris; the wise officers broke open the box, and seeing a body blackened all over, gravely pronounced it to be the remains of a man baked in an oven; the antique bandages came in support of their opinion, as they mistook them for a shirt half burnt; and after a proper inquest, the supposed murdered person was sent to the Morne, or bone-house, to be owned.

Some hours after the owner made his appearance to claim his property, which he supposed was detained at the office. On his first requisition, the wise men of Gotham looked at him with a mixture of amazement and horror; seeing him fall into a downright passion, one of the officers more sensible than the rest, approached and softly whispered in the traveller's ear, that he had better hold his tongue, and save his neck from the halter, by a timely flight.

Unable to guess at the meaning of so unexpected an address, the gentleman retired half mad with anger and disappointment, and directly applied to the lieutenant de police. After having danced attendance for three days, he at last obtained, from the grave magistrate, a Permit, in form, to take away from the bone-house the Egyptian prince, or princess; who, after having slept sound for 2000 years within a pyramid, was on the eve of receiving Christian burial.

Extract of a letter from Cronstadt, Aug. 16.

" Orders have been received here from the admiralty of Petersburgh, for the equipment of a ship of 60 guns, and two frigates, which have been carried into execution with the utmost dispatch, and they are now almost ready to proceed to sea. They are intended to convoy a fleet of merchantmen bound to the Mediterranean, in order to protect them against any insults which may be offered them by the piratical vessels belonging to the states of Barbary, which have lately captured some Russian ships bound to Venice. The whole fleet, when ready, is to form a junction at Portsmouth, and from thence to proceed on the intended voyage.

" Every hand here is fully employed, especially in the iron founderies, in the casting of cannon, shot, &c. and it is looked upon that a war with Turkey is inevitable.

" A body of 400 men has lately arrived here, on board six transports, who are to act as guards to the works, new barracks, &c. having been erected for their reception."

Within these few days great quantities of fruit have been stolen from the gardens and orchards at Hackney, Clapton, and Homerton. Monday evening two chimney-sweepers were observed while robbing the orchard of Mr. Humphries, master of the Woolpack brewhouse at Homerton, and one was taken, but was soon after dismissed with a proper reprimand; the other escaped by a feat of agility worth mentioning; his pursuers being within a few yards of him, he turned into a house in Homerton-row, and though there was a large fire in the kitchen grate, he stepped upon the bars, and passing up the chimney was almost in an instant upon the roof of the house; going over several buildings, he descended another chimney, and got clear off.

The following anecdote is communicated by a gentleman who left Canterbury a few days ago:—About three weeks since a young lady, seemingly of fashion, attended by a single female, nearly of her own age, arrived at an inn in Canterbury, from France, when, after taking a slight refreshment, they proceeded to the Cathedral, and enquiring for the shrine of Thomas a Beckett, begged to be left alone there for some time. This the sexton readily complied with; and after staying about half an hour, they returned to the inn, immediately took post horses, and proceeded to Dover on their return to France.

Various conjectures have been formed on this extraordinary proceeding; the most probable is, that the young devotee had been enjoined, or voluntarily imposed on herself, some penance to be performed at this shrine, and that her enthusiasm was such that she effected it.

In a prosecution for an assault, on Monday at Guildhall, Mr. Garrow asked the plaintiff, how many black eyes he had? and the witness answered only two, your honour.

The riot among the operative weavers at Glasgow has, at length, through the judicious conduct of the magistrates, and the well-timed interference of the military, almost totally subsided.

GLASGOW, August 1.

We have the pleasure to inform the public, that the operations upon the canal go on with great spirit, and that the old part of this useful navigation will be again opened upon Wednesday the 28th of August, and in place of six and a half feet, vessels now drawing seven feet water may hereafter pass from Grangemouth to the bason of Glasgow, and likewise to the first lock upon the new cut.

On Monday last arrived in this city, the celebrated Mr. Howard, who has devoted his life to obtain an acquaintance with the situation of the distressed and miserable, and to form plans for the alleviation of their sufferings. He immediately visited the prison, and much approved of the alterations and improvements which are at present carrying on there by the magistrates. Without any previous intimation, he visited also the hospital, and was much pleased with the attention paid to the health and comfortable accommodation of the poor, lodged in that house, and with the regularity and order which he found established there.

AMERICA.

PORTSMOUTH, Nov. 3.

" Mr. Printer,

" I passed through several principal towns in this state the present week—the general questions were, not whether the great constitution was good, but why there was not a session of the legislature called to prepare the way for its adoption, as the people grow anxious to have it done; as the official papers had probably arrived a fortnight since? The only reply I could hear was——'tis strange indeed————but time————

Ex paucis verbis plurima intendere possis.

NEW-YORK, Nov. 16.

Extract of a letter received by the Packet Le Courier de L'Europe, captain Fournier, arrived yesterday in this port.

" The archbishop of Toulouse being made prime minister, the marechals of Castries and Segur, ministers of the marine and war departments, resigned; it is said the former will have the regiment of the guards, in the room of marechal Byron. The compte de Montmorin, minister of foreign affairs, acts pro tempore, as minister of the marine, to which department the comte de la Luzerne is appointed, being now governor of the French Hispaniola. Mr. de Villedeuil, comptroller-general, has resigned—the parliament of Paris has returned to that capital—the provincial assemblies are established in all the provinces, and many have been assembled already—the marquis de la Fayette is in Auvergne, as a principal member of the assembly of that province; so that the late fracas and political bustle in France has rather been useful, in as much as it teaches us to meddle and interest ourselves in our own national concerns. The king's private œconomy instead of forty millions is carried to fifty-two, and it is thought that such has been the opposition of all the parliaments, that neither the stamp act nor teritorial impost will take place;—our harvest has been singularly abundant."

The happiness of a state, says a correspondent, consists not in its number or wealth, but in the good disposition, wise regulation and good conduct of its inhabitants. Hence,

That state is happy, whose laws and rulers are good, and its inhabitants industrious, frugal and in a just subordination. And,

That state is wretched and miserable, where pride, idleness and dissipation prevail, men and not laws govern, and the rulers are ignorant, or wicked.

A government without a directing and controuling power, is like a ship without master, pilot or rudder.

A government without faith, is a government without credit; and a government without credit, is a government without energy, and a government without energy, is no government at all. And,

A government too popular borders upon tyranny.

Yesterday arrived in this port his most Christian Majesty's Packet Courier de l'Europe, —— Fournier, Esquire, commander, in 54 days from Havre de Grace.

In her came passengers Doctor Peadle and his lady.

The advices we have received by the French packet are—

That the Count de Moutiers has been appointed minister plenipotentiary of France to the United States of America, in place of the chevalier de la Luzerne. The count was to have taken his passage in the packet now arrived; but, on account of some delay, was detained till another opportunity.

That, early in September, orders had been given for the equipment of 25 sail of the line at Brest; but were afterwards countermanded.

That, as we have already published, the Prussian army entered the territories of the republic; that the army had, at that time, assisted the stadtholder in taking possession of the province of Utrecht. And, with respect to the motives, it is conjectured that the measures taken by the Prussian army were not unknown to the neighbouring courts, who, probably, might wish to see the dissenting provinces compelled to agree to the plan of accommodation proposed and agreed on by four of the provinces, which make the majority of the Dutch union. In consequence of the measures taken, the province of Holland, it was expected, would soon accept of the proffered mediation.

Yesterday arrived the ship Montgomery, captain Bunyan, in 7 weeks from London. By this ship we have no later papers than were already received by the late arrival from Bristol.

John Miller, Esquire, of this city, merchant, and Mr. Seton, son of William Seton, Esq. came passengers in the Montgomery.

By the Montgomery we are informed of the arrival of the Cartaret Packet, capt. Newman, from this port, at Falmouth, about the 19th of September.

Captain Bunyan, off Falmouth, on the 29th of September, spoke the Grantham Packet, captain Bull, from this port for Falmouth, then 22 days out.

Captain Bunyan also spoke, on the 13th of October, the ship Prince George, captain Strong, from this port for London, lat. 45, 43 N. long. 32, 55 W. 20 days out, all well.

Nov. 20. Every circumstance conspires to prove this great truth, that the consequence of the people's rejecting the Fœderal Convention will be anarchy in the extreme. If then, only the possibility of a transfer of some of our franchises, will be the effect of adopting it—can the enlightened citizens of America hesitate one moment what course to pursue?—Can they wish an introduction of that baneful progeny of hell, anarchy and misrule——

From whose swell'd eyes there runs a briny flood;
Whose crimson faces gleam with clotted blood;
Around whose head serpentine elf-locks play:
Whose tatter'd raiments rotten skins betray—
And brandish'd flames their trembling hands obey!

A correspondent asks, are the gentlemen who have withheld their assent from the fœderal constitution, superior to Washington or Franklin, either in abilities or patriotism—men whose names, borne on the wings of fame, are known throughout the world—and whose merit is universally acknowledged—indeed the good and the great of every nation have been lavish in their panegyricks on their characters—a French philosopher, speaking of our illustrious Fabius, inraptured bids us to " Begin with the infant in the cradle: Let the first word he lisps be WASHINGTON."

Died on Sunday evening, Andrew Moodie, Esq. major of artillery in the late army of the United States, and since peace, commissary of military stores for this state.

A few Observations in favor of the New Continental Government, now under the consideration of citizens of this state.

1. THAT it was formed by a convention composed of the most sensible, virtuous, patriotic and independent characters that this, or perhaps any other country on the face of the globe, can procure.

2. That it is ushered to us under the respectable and illustrious signature of George Washington, whose disinterested and invaluable services to his country, has rendered him the admiration of the present age; and, to suppose that any act of his could be intended, in the most distant degree, to injure a people whose freedom he has already established, at the risk of his life and fortune, would be a piece of base ingratitude, that no honest American can possibly be guilty of.

3. That it will unite under one hand, and bring to one point, the resources, strength and commerce of this extensive country, and consequently serve to render us wealthy, respectable and powerful, as a mercantile, as well as a warlike people.

4. That equal justice will be administered to each state, in the support of government, in proportion to its abilities and local situation, and no state will be induced to furnish its full quota (which this state has frequently done) when many others neglect furnishing a single shilling.

5. That in all probability the first good consequence, arising from a firm and respectable government, will be the relinquishment of the WESTERN POSTS by the British, according to the treaty of peace—which are now so unjustly detained from us, and for no other reason but a contempt of our government.

6. That the late disturbances in Massachusetts, New-Hampshire, and Pennsylvania, and even on the borders of this state, shew a langour in our present government, that must alarm every thinking person; and which must, if not guarded against in future, end in anarchy and confusion. A situation infinitely more to be dreaded, than all the evils which can be conceived from the tyranny of an absolute monarch.

7th and lastly. That it meets with opposition from few or none in this state, but persons who hold posts of profit and honor, and are fearful that a part of their state consequence must be swallowed up in the United States' government. A circumstance that should set every honest and well meaning citizen on his guard against all such opposers, however exalted their station may be, or respectable their private characters: For such is the weakness of frail nature, that none of us can act, or even think, with impartial justice, on any subject that interferes with our interest or ambition.

Albany, Oct. 31, 1787.

The honourable James Wadsworth, comptroller of the state of Connecticut, presented his resignation of that office to the legislature of that state, which was accepted by the lower house, but negatived by the upper house.

RICHMOND, Nov. 10.

The Union Society offer the following questions, as subjects of discussion on Wednesday evening, at the large room in the Union Tavern.

1st. Has the making of law a profession been of service to society?

2d. Whether is the savage or civilized most favorable to human happiness?

3d. Whether is a public or private education best calculated to form an useful member of society?

CHARLESTON, October 30.

Extract of a letter from a gentleman in London.

"I wish very much to hear what you are about in Charleston; what good laws you have made for the increase of private virtue, as well as for the support of public credit. Our newspapers inform us that your brethren to the northward have been at loggerheads; which cannot fail in a great measure to reconcile our folks to the loss of America. Perhaps the fable of the fox and grapes may not be very inapplicable on the occasion. Trade is now as brisk and money as plenty as we could wish. The French treaty began its operation on the 10th of last May: It is generally applauded, and expected to turn out very advantageous to both countries; but the effects of it have not yet been felt, although our bon vivants expect to have claret for two shillings a bottle, and brandy for almost nothing."

Extract from Mr. Jefferson's Notes on Virginia, Page 195.

"By concentrating the legislative, executive, and judiciary departments of government in the same hands, we have precisely the definition of a despotic government. It will be no alleviation that these powers are to be exercised by a plurality of hands, and not by a single one. Let those who doubt it turn their eyes on the republic of Venice. As little will it avail us that they are chosen by ourselves.—An elective despotism is not the government we fought for; but one which should be founded on free principles, be so divided that neither department should be suffered to transcend its legal limits, without being effectually checked and restrained by the others. For which reason the legislative, executive, and judiciary departments should be separate and distinct, so that no person should be suffered to exercise the powers of more than one of them at the same time."

Philadelphia, Nov. 23.

Extract of a letter from Augusta, Georgia, dated Oct. 26.

"We lately found ourselves in a very disagreeable situation, not from any danger we apprehended from the Indians at this place, but from the prospect of a war being entered into by the executive, under the form of the then militia law—when the person and property of each inhabitant would have been at the disposal of every militia officer. Our fears are now greatly relieved by the meeting of the legislature, who are passing laws for carrying on the war with vigour—the expence to fall as equally as possible on the inhabitants.

"There is an act passed to raise 3000 men, to be enlisted in any of the states: they are to have for their services, each a bounty of 640 acres of land, being one mile square; and are to be supplied by a specific tax of 6s 3d. per cent. on all taxable property. There is also an impress act, under certain restrictions, to take place only in cases of great emergency."

Thursday the 29th instant is appointed by the authority of New Hampshire as a day of public thanksgiving and praise throughout that state.

We hear, that the president of New Hampshire has proposed to his council, to convene the General Assembly of that state at an earlier period than that to which they stand adjourned, in order to take into consideration the expediency of appointing a state convention, to deliberate upon the new constitution, as reported by the federal convention.

From the London Evening Post.

A COMET.

Notice of the expected return of the comet of 1532 and 1661, in the year 1788.

By Dr. Maskelyne, Astronomer Royal of Greenwich Observatory.

THE elements of the orbits of the comets, observed by Aprian, in 1532, and by Helvetius, in 1661, are so much alike, as to have induced Dr. Halley to suppose them to be one and the same comet; and astronomers since have joined in the same opinion. Hence it should return to its perihelion April 27, 1789. But from the distances of the planets, it will probably come a few months sooner.—It will be first seen in the southern parts of the heavens, if any astronomer should watch for it in situations nearer the line, or in southern climates, in the course of the year 1788, and probably not before the month of September. Astronomers who may happen to be in those parts, will be enabled to direct their telescopes for discovering it as early as possible, by being furnished with the following elements of its orbit.

The perihelion distance	0 44851
	d. m. s.
Place of ascending node	2 24 11
Inclination of the orbit to the ecliptic	32 36
Perihelion forwarder in the orbit than the ascending node	33 28

Time of the perihelium in the latter end of the year 1788, or the beginning of the year 1789.

Its motion is direct.

If it should come to its perihelion on January 1, 1789, it might be seen in the southern parts of the world with a good acromatic telescope, about the middle of September, towards the middle of Pisces, with 55d. south latitude, and 53d. south declination.

SONG,

By ROBERT BURNS.

Tune, ROSLIN CASTLE.

I.

THE gloomy night is gath'ring fast,
Loud roars the wild, inconstant blast,
Yon murky cloud is foul with rain,
I see it driving o'er the plain;
The hunter now has left the moor,
The scatt'red coveys meet secure,
While here I wander, prest with care,
Along the lonely banks of Ayr.

II.

The Autumn mourns her rip'ning corn,
By early Winter's ravage torn;
Across her placid, azure sky,
She sees the scowling tempest fly:
Chill runs my blood to hear it rave,
I think upon the stormy wave,
Where many a danger I must dare,
Far from the bonie banks of Ayr.

III.

'Tis not the surging billow's roar,
'Tis not the fatal, deadly shore;
Tho' death in ev'ry shape appear,
The wretched have no room to fear:
But round my heart the ties are bound,
That heart transpierc'd with many a wound;
These bleed afresh, those ties I tear,
To leave the bonie banks of Ayr.

IV.

Farewell, old Coila's hills and dales,
Her heathy moors and winding vales;
The scenes where wretched Fancy roves,
Pursuing past, unhappy loves!
Farewell, my friends! farewell my foes!
My peace with these, my love with those—
The bursting tears my heart declare,
Farewell, the bonie banks of Ayr!

A laudable Instance of AVARICE.

A FRENCH priest, whose name was Gadinet, went for a long time by the name of the Griper. He refused to relieve the most apparent wretchedness; and, by the skilful management of his vineyard, had the good fortune to acquire immense sums of money. The inhabitants of Rheims, who were his fellow citizens, detested him; and the populace, who seldom love a miser, wherever he went, received him with contempt. He still, however, continued his former simplicity of life, his amazing and unremitted frugality. This good man had long experienced the wants of the poor in the city, particularly in having no water but what they were obliged to buy at an advanced price; wherefore, that whole fortune which he had been amassing, he laid out in an aqueduct, by which he did the poor more useful and lasting service, than if he had distributed his whole income in charity every day at his door.

Mill Stones & Boulting Cloths,

FOR SALE BY

Robert Lewis & Sons,

At their Stores and Mill-Stone Manufactory, On the fourth Wharf below the Drawbridge, and next to Levi Hollingſworth's,

BURRS of excellent quality, juſt imported from France, and are now manufacturing into mill ſtones of all ſizes and dimenſions which may be ordered, by a complete workman from England, and warranted at leaſt equal in quality, and low in price, as thoſe imported from Europe. Directions will be given (if required) for laying out the quarters, and dreſſing them to the beſt advantage, according to the temper of the ſtones.

COLOGNE MILL STONES (commonly called CULLINGS) imported from Holland; a few of different ſizes.

COUNTRYMADE ditto, from the American rock, of every uſual ſize, or any other that may be ordered, the beſt grit for merchant or country work, either to run together, or work with a French Burr or Cologne, ever yet experienced in this ſtate.

Warranted Boulting Cloths.

A very extenſive and compleat Aſſortment, lately imported from the manufactories, ſuitable to every branch of the boulting buſineſs; which are to be diſpoſed of at the ſame low rates as they were ſold before the revolution, at the ſtores abovementioned, or at ROBERT LEWIS's dwelling houſe in Spruce ſtreet, three doors from Third ſtreet. MILLERS and others may be furniſhed with cloths of ſuperior quality and texture to any we have hitherto known imported into America: thoſe who are unacquainted with this very difficult and precarious article, may rely on being ſupplied with ſuch cloths as will certainly anſwer their purpoſes; provided they attend to directions for affixing them on the reels, in the moſt advantageous manner to perform the work intended; which will ſave the trouble and expence of returning cloths of an inferior kind, which are frequently ſold in this and the neighbouring ſtates.

Philadelphia, October 16, 1787.

For Griſt Mills & other Water Works

On an extenſive Plan,

One of the beſt ſituations in America is offered

FOR SALE,

Together With

Batſto Iron-Works,

At the forks of Little Egg-Harbour river, one of the moſt healthy ſpots in New Jerſey, 38 miles by land from Philadelphia, and within a few hours ſail of New York.

THE river, communicating with the ſea by the beſt inlet on the Jerſey coaſt, is navigable for veſſels of 200 tons within a few miles of the works; thoſe of 100 tons may approach within one mile; flats and ſcows, carrying 10 or 12 tons, load and unload at the works. The uſual freight to New York or Philadelphia is 10 ſhillings per ton. The furnace ſtream affords plenty of water, in the dryeſt ſeaſon, for 3 or 4 pair of mill ſtones, beſides ſupplying the iron works.——An excellent dam, which has been increaſing in ſtrength many years by the cinder from the furnace, is well ſecured from the danger of freſhes, and the works are ſcarcely ever injured or delayed by either ice or back-water, though the tide ſwells to the foot of the dam: mills may therefore be erected at a moderate expence. This being a part of the country in which many people and many teams are neceſſarily employed in collecting and preparing for market the iron and lumber with which it abounds, and at the ſame time illy adapted to the raiſing of grain for their ſupport, there is, and muſt continue to be, a demand for large quantities of midlings, cornell, ſhorts and bran, at advanced prices; and the conveniencep of conveying flour at a light expence, either to New York or Philadelphia, or to more diſtant markets, will not be overlooked nor conſidered as of ſmall importance, eſpecially as there are few mill ſeats of any conſiderable capacity equally adapted to the New York market, which is not unfrequently ſupplied with ſuperfine flour from Philadelphia. A choice of the various kinds of wheat may be drawn to this ſeat from Virginia, Maryland, Delaware, New Jerſey, and New York with greater eaſe and convenience than to almoſt any other mills now in being.

The FURNACE, which by the extenſive lands annexed to it, is abundantly ſupplied with wood and ore, is now in blaſt, and is noted for producing the beſt hollow ware in America, the metal being peculiarly well adapted to the making of caſtings of all kinds, as well as excellent bar iron.

A FORGE, with four fires and two hammers, belongs to the eſtate, and ſtands about half a mile from the furnace, on another fine ſtream which affords plenty of water.

A SLITTING and ROLLING MILL, having been diſuſed for the laſt two or three years, may want ſome repairs to prepare it for uſe; but the forebays and gates are in perfect order, and being in the proper ſpot for griſt mills, may be appropriated to that uſe.

Two SAW MILLS in good order, and a ſmall Griſt Mill.

The MANSION HOUSE is elegantly ſituated about 100 yards from the furnace, on an height which commands a view of the whole works, and of the two villages formed by the ſurrounding buildings belonging to the eſtate, ſuch as barns, ſtables, coal houſes, workſhops, ſtorehouſes and dwellings for workmen. Adjoining the manſion houſe is a large and fruitful garden, affording plenty of vegetables, and well ſtored with choſen fruit trees: alſo a young bearing orchard, containing near 2000 apple trees, moſtly grafted.

Theſe excellent accommodations for extenſive and profitable manufactories, are offered to ſale at a very low rate, and on terms of payment calculated for the eaſe of the purchaſer, who may pay the greater part in the produce of the Iron Works, at a price to be agreed upon; and they are capable of producing more in one year, than will pay the whole price demanded.

For particulars, apply to WILLIAM RICHARDS, at the ſaid Works, JOHN COX, at Bloomſbury, near Trenton, or CHARLES PETTIT, in Philadelphia.

PHILADELPHIA: Printed and Sold by JOHN DUNLAP and DAVID C. CLAYPOOLE;

Prichard and Hall,
PRINTERS,

RESPECTFULLY inform the Public, that they have now in the Preſs, an American Edition of an entirely new and highly approved Publication, entitled

Notes on the State of Virginia;
Written by his Excellency THOMAS JEFFERSON, Miniſter Plenipotentiary from the United States of America at the Court of France.

This WORK will be printed in a handſome Octavo Volume, on good Paper, with a new & elegant ſcabbarded Type, and ſhall contain about two hundred and fifty Pages. The Volume will be neatly bound and lettered, and delivered to the Subſcribers at the very low Price of 7/6, which is juſt half the coſt of the London Edition—To Non-ſubſcribers 9/. No Money to be received until the Book is delivered, which will be ſome time in January next.

THIS WORK, which has in Europe eſtabliſhed the fame of the Author, as a Philoſopher and a Man of Letters, will undoubtedly meet with the encouragement due to its merit from the Citizens of the American States, in whoſe ſervice thoſe talents have ſo often been diſplayed.

Though entitled Notes on the State of Virginia, his obſervations are not confined to that ſtate alone, but often refer to different parts of the United States, particularly thoſe ſituated on the Weſtern Waters; and under this unaſſuming title the philoſophical reader will find ample food for his curioſity, in a more perfect Natural Hiſtory of Virginia, and its neighbourhood, than has ever yet appeared.

In a word, all America knows Mr. Jefferſon; and we may venture to aſſure the Public, that the wiſdom of his political, and the depth of his natural and philoſophical reſearches, could be no where more pefectly exemplified than in theſe Notes on Virginia.

It is therefore hoped that the Encouragers of American Productions of this nature, will be ſpeedy in giving in their names to thoſe entruſted with ſubſcription-papers, which will be gratefully acknowledged by their humble ſervants,

The Dying Chriſtian's Soliloquy.

Imitation of Marcus Aurelius.

WHY ſhrinks my weak nature? ah! what can it mean?
Why flutters my heart, which, till now was ſerene?
Why ling'ring and trembling when glory's ſo near?—
Or whence this enchantment that fetters me here?
Thou world of illuſions, forever adieu!
Your phantoms, unhallow'd, recede from my view:
New worlds and new wonders my paſſions invite;
And glories ineffable dawn on my ſight!
Hail! viſions celeſtial; and THOU, divine ſource
Of life, hope and glory! if e'er in my courſe,
Thy grace has reliev'd and exalted my heart,
Now let me in peace, and in triumph depart.
'Tis done—Lo, they come! bright celeſtials deſcend;
Saints, angels and ſeraphs their ſymphonies lend:
The ſpheres are all vocal—the raptures draw near;
Immortal vibrations reſound in my ear.
Ceaſe, ceaſe, then fond nature! oh! ceaſe thy vain
ſtrife,
And let me now languiſh and die into life:
Bleſt powers! receive me—I mount on your wing—
Oh! grave, where's thy vict'ry? Oh! death, where's thy ſting?

A N E C D O T E.

AN idle young lad, being lounging about the kitchen, in a gentleman's houſe, on Sunday morning, when all the family were at church but the cook maid and groom, the maid aſked him why he did not go to church as the reſt of the family did? The boy ſaid, he never was at church in his life, and did not know what to do when he came there, and knew no one that was there. O, ſaid ſhe, you are to do nothing your ſelf, but mind what other people do and ſay, and as for acquaintance there, you'll find enough, and thoſe that have the moſt buſineſs there. You know Mr. Johnſon, ſaid ſhe, the parſon; yes, very well, anſwered the boy: and Mr. Adams the clerk, ſaid ſhe: Ay, to be ſure, replied the boy, what, will they be there? Well, they are very civil people, I ſhall come to no harm in their company; and ſo away he marched. But in leſs than half an hour the boy came running home again in a terrible fright: Why, what's the matter, Tom, cried the cook maid, is church done already? Nay, ſaid the boy, I know not whether or no the church be done, but I am ſure there is a great deal of miſchief done by this time. How ſo, ſaid the maid? It is all owing to that rogue Adams, replied the boy. I ſhall never have a good opinion of him again, as long as I live. Mr. Johnſon and he have had a lamentable battle; Mr. Johnſon got up into a place, and ſpoke very mildly and very civilly, I thought, to Mr. Adams, and to be ſure he gave him two words for one, and I do not know how many people joined him, then Mr. Johnſon ſpoke again to pacify him, but Adams and all his gang were immediately at him, and ſo they went on for a long time, no body taking poor Mr. Johnſon's part; however, he talked ſo that he made them quiet for a good while; but upon ſome words, I ſuppoſe, that was taken amiſs, up ſtarted Adams, and called for two ſtaves at once, and then all the people fell into ſuch a haloboloo, that, frighted at the noiſe, I ran out of the church as ſoon as poſſible—but I hope they have not killed poor Mr. Johnſon—for they all got up and began to rave at him like madmen.

N E W - Y O R K, Nov. 19.

The board of wardens at Savannah have publiſhed a notification to the inhabitants, that it is very neceſſary works of defence be thrown round the town, for which purpoſe the inhabitants are required to ſend every ſlave above the age of ſixteen years, to repair the public works.

Nov. 21. On Thurſday laſt, about break of day, a moſt daring attempt was made by ſome criminals in the new priſon, to effect an eſcape.—Six felons were confined in the condemned room, three of whom were chained to the floor.—On that morning the turnkey went his cuſtomary rounds to ſee that all was right.—He had no ſooner entered their apartment, than he was ſeized by the three who had the liberty of the room, who, with knives at his breaſt, forced from him the keys, locked him in, made their way down ſtairs, and paſſed through the doors below the debtors rooms, the laſt of which they bolted on the lower ſide.—Mr. Little, the goaler, hearing the noiſe, opened his ſleeping room door, but had ſcarcely appeared, when he was knocked down and ſeverely cut on the head.—By this time the debtors were alarmed, and haſtened to the aſſiſtance of Mr. Little; but their intention was fruſtrated by the felons precaution of bolting the lower door. In this ſtate they would moſt probably have effected their purpoſe, but for the preſence of mind diſplayed by Mrs. Little, who ruſhed up ſtairs, and unbolted the door before the villains were aware of her deſign.—The debtors, now, with an alacrity which does them honor, immediately arrived to the aſſiſtance of Mr. Little, and the fellows were ſpeedily overpowered, and reluctantly conveyed to their former habitation. Tho' Mr. Little was dangerouſly wounded, yet we do not underſtand that any bad conſequence is apprehended.

B A L T I M O R E, Nov. 20.

On Wedneſday laſt, a quorum of the Houſe of Delegates of this ſtate aſſembled at Annapolis, and the honorable Thomas Cockey Deye, Eſquire, was unanimouſly re-choſen ſpeaker.

On Saturday evening laſt, arrived from the weſtward, the ingenious Andrew Ellicott, Eſquire, of this town.

In September laſt, colonel Joſeph Brandt, the celebrated Indian partizan, had a grand council at Niagara, conſiſting of ſome of the principal chiefs of the Six Nations and Meſſaſogers,—ſhortly after the council broke up, colonel Brandt ſet out for Detroit, up Lake Erie, with two ſloops and ſeventeen batteaux, loaded with warriors, ammunition and proviſions,—a few days previous to his departure, he was heard to ſay, that the Long-Knife (meaning the Virginians) were very troubleſome, and paid little regard to treaties—that he would now pay them a viſit, and could treat with them upon a par, being accompanied by the tomahawk, as the Long-Knife were always by the bayonet, and if they were for peace, they ſhould have it; but if for war, they ſhould find that war accompanied him alſo.

N A S S A U, October 27.

Yeſterday arrived here in the ſhip Mercury Packet, after a paſſage of eight weeks from England, his Excellency the Right Honorable the Earl of Dunmore, governor in chief of the Bahama Iſlands.

Philadelphia, Nov. 24.

Yeſterday the honorable the Convention elected James Campbell, eſquire, for their ſecretary, and Mr. Joſeph Fry door-keeper. On motion of the honorable Thomas M'Kean, eſq; the propoſed Conſtitution was read, and then the houſe adjourned till this morning.

Extract of a letter from North Carolina.

"To be, or not to be, is now the queſtion."

"The moment is at hand that will fix the fate of America, either to riſe reſpected and affluent, or to ſink into contempt, anarchy, and perhaps a total diſſolution of our ſhort exiſtence as a nation: had the collected wiſdom of the univerſe been drawn into one centre to promote our happineſs, it is evident they could not have deviſed more effectual means than the late convention, whoſe proceedings reſulted from a conſummate knowledge and inveſtigation of our preſent ſituation, as well as mutual ſacrifices for the common end of the general government. Since their meaſures have become public, I have taken pains to mix among the different claſſes of mankind, and I am happy to aſſure you, the enthuſiaſm is general, and determined to ſupport the conſtitution they offer us, as the only ultimatum upon which our commercial and political exiſtence reſts. I muſt however remark, that I have found ſome oppoſition, but in preſſing their objections, they are loſt in perplexity; hence it is evident, they are actuated by perſonal views, and diveſted of the pure amor patriæ, that ought to inſpire the breaſt of every virtuous American in the preſent criſis; a criſis pregnant in events the moſt important America has ever witneſſed; as it not only embraces the welfare of this generation, but of millions who are yet to riſe out of the womb of futurity. I hope in God, therefore, this illiberal junto will meet with that execration and contempt they ſo juſtly merit; for unleſs this new conſtitution is implicitly and ſpeedily adopted, I tremble in anticipating the event, which cannot fall ſhort of an immediate annihilation of our federal chain, and poſſibly ſome links of it devoted to foreign yokes. May that Being who has brought us thus far into maturity diſpoſe every heart with firmneſs to embrace chearfully our only hope, is the ardent prayer of,

Dear Sir, yours, &c.

From the New-Jerſey Journal.

Having obſerved in your Journal a treatiſe on the utility of Oxen in agriculture, and finding that many farmers have been totally deprived of that benefit, by the difficulty of breaking their oxen to the yoke, you will therefore publiſh the following infallible method, whereby ſtears may be taught to draw well in a few days practice.

LET the farmer carefully yoke his ſtears in a cloſe yard or ſtable, and not move them till they get ſufficiently accuſtomed to the yoke, ſo that they will eat their food when yoked, which will be in the courſe of a day:—Let them again be yoked the ſecond day, and a pair of gentle horſes or oxen be faſtened before them, in which ſtation let them ſtand, until they become familiar with ſaid horſes or oxen, which will generally be effected in one day, except the ſtears ſhould be uncommonly wild, which will occaſion a ſecond day's practice, after the ſame manner; and the next day the ſtears may be yoked, the horſes or oxen put before them as uſual, and let them be faſtened to a waggon or any other carriage, they fearing the carriage behind them, and being accuſtomed to the old oxen before, they will proceed forward without being whipped or bruiſed.—By the above proceſs the farmer will never fail of ſucceſs in having good working oxen.

Nov. 18. 1787, A FARMER.

NASSAU, (New-Providence) Oct. 20.

Extract of a Letter from Colonel Alexander M'Gillevray, Chief of the Creek Indians.

"Little Tellaſſee, 30th June, 1787.

"MATTERS ſtand with our neighbours toward the ſun riſing and us, much in the ſame way as they were when I wrote you in laſt January.

"The trifling and inſolent conduct of the Georgians toward this nation, in regard to our requiſitions for ſpeedy and effectual ſatisfaction, concerning their encroachments on our hunting grounds, cauſed a general clamour, and called loudly upon me to take vigorous meaſures to obtain from them by force what was not to be expected from their juſtice.

"Juſt as we were about to prepare ourſelves for that purpoſe, there arrived among us a Mr. White, a gentleman appointed by the American Congreſs to enquire into the nature and cauſe of the diſputes that had ariſen between this nation and Georgia, and, if poſſible, to effect an amicable accommodation of them.

"In an aſſembly of the chiefs of the Lower Creeks, he explained the nature of the buſineſs upon which he was ſent to this country, and delivered a Talk from the honorable body that ſent him, which was approved of. It expreſſed ſentiments of benevolence, well calculated to eſtabliſh a good underſtanding between us. One from the Georgians was not ſo well received, as it ſhewed no intention of relinquiſhing their unjuſt claims; and the whole of their propoſitions offered for an adjuſtment of differences on thoſe grounds, were rejected with anger by the chiefs.

"The chief of the Cowetas town, on the part of the aſſembly, anſwered Mr. White: He declared his ſatisfaction at the good diſpoſition of Congreſs for the Red People, and wiſhed they had as chief council of the thirteen fires of America, taken up the matter ſooner, and, by concluding a peace and putting the Red People on the footing they were at the beginning of the late war, removed all future cauſe of animoſity.—As to the Georgians, there are warriors now living who tell, that the Engliſh were permitted to build a town on Savannah river, for the advantage of enjoying a good trade, but were confined to the ſea ſhores and a diſtrict round them as far as the tide flowed up the rivers; and, by ſolemn compact, that government was never to ſuffer any of its people to go beyond theſe preſcribed limits, without leave given by the nation.—This agreement was always faithfully adhered to by the Engliſh; and when a foreign nation attempted to drive the new ſettlers from their habitations, and would have ſucceeded had not this nation taken up arms and aſſiſted them to repel the invaders, and thereby ſecured them in the poſſeſſions which our fathers had granted them. That a friendly intercourſe was ever ſince kept up between us with but little interruption, until a general madneſs had overſpread the land ſome ſummers ago, and which ſtill ſeems to prevail, otherwiſe the children of a people who have ſo lately ſettled on our lands, and have been defended by us from their enemies, could not be ſo regardleſs of all ſenſe of ſuch great obligations as to purſue the deſtruction of a nation to whom they and their fathers owe ſo much. There are alſo warriors ſtill living who rendered them ſuch ſervices, and are ſtill able to puniſh ſuch ingratitude. On the whole, we were glad to ſee ſo reſpectable a character among us; and although we could not, with a due regard to our own intereſt, agree to the whole of his propoſitions, yet we wiſhed that Congreſs ſhould learn the truth from him; and hoped that the grand council of America, as wiſe and good men, would conſider our diſcontents in their proper light, and take the quickeſt meaſures to do away the injuries complained of, and a laſting peace be eſtabliſhed between the White and Red People.

"Upon my taking leave of Mr. White, he returning to Georgia, I promiſed him, at his requeſt, to ſuſpend hoſtilities on our parts, and if the nation could not be prevailed on to forbear them altogether, yet, at leaſt, wait the reſult of the deliberations of Congreſs, on this affair, which we ſhould receive in all Auguſt next. I adviſed the chiefs of this, to which they all aſſented; but an affair has juſt happened which I am apprehenſive will fruſtrate their pacific intentions.

"You may have ſeen in the Georgia newſpapers of laſt ſummer, an account of colonel Clark having attacked and diſperſed a large body of Indians with a ſmall number of his men, only loſing two killed. I ſhall now relate to you the fact. A conſiderable body of our Indians had driven off the ſettlers on the ſouth fork of Oconee, which they effected without oppoſition any whatever, the Georgians having fled before them; as ſoon as the Indians were returned, colonel Clark went out, came into the Indian limits and fell upon two Indians, (not belonging to the before-mentioned Indian party) who were hunting game; the Indians, in defending themſelves, killed two of Clark's men and wounded a third, before they themſelves fell.

"All people who know any thing of Indians, know that they make it a point of honour to revenge thoſe killed in war. Accordingly the friends of the deceaſed Indians, this ſummer, killed two Americans; the Georgians, inſtead of purſuing the party that did the action, fell upon ſeveral little parties of their friendly Indians, of the Cuſſitahs town, and killed and took eleven*, who were hunting in the ſettlements, under ſanction of the ſtrict friendſhip that had always ſubſiſted between them. This affair will cauſe an immediate rupture, and when the circumſtances that brought it on are known, we cannot be accuſed of breaking our promiſes made to Mr. White, commiſſioner of Congreſs; and it will convince him of the juſtneſs of my obſervations, reſpecting Upper Georgian faith and honor; as by the late action they have manifeſted the moſt glaring diſregard for treaties confirmed by every tie that binds civilized people. Acts of retaliation were exploded in the ſtrongeſt terms; it was ſtipulated that neither ſide was to have recourſe to it, but ſatisfaction firſt be demanded from the offending party, and in caſe of refuſal a declaration of war ſhould enſue. We have ſent a formal demand for ſatisfaction, and if refuſed, it will be taken; then this breach may be repaired.

"On the 10th inſt. we had a general meeting of the Creek nation, to receive a deputation from the Northern Indians, conſiſting of chief warriors of the Mohawks, Iroquois, Hurons, Oneidas, and Shawaneſe, when the Mohawk chief, with a large belt of wampum in his hand, thus addreſſed himſelf:—

"Brothers, the Warriors of the Creek nation,

"We are come deputed from your elder brothers, the chiefs and warriors of the Northern Nations, to renew and ſtrengthen the friendſhip and confederacy formed with you and other red people, our brothers, at the beginning of the laſt war: This belt, the token of amity from twenty-four nations, we were deſired to deliver to you from our grand council, held near Detroit laſt winter.

"A Belt of White Wompum.

"Brothers,

"This is the belt of peace, given to us by our fathers and friends, the Engliſh, when they told us that a peace was concluded between them and the Americans, at the ſame time deſiring us and all red people to hold it faſt with both hands, and to lay down our ſharp weapons of war: we obeyed the advice of our fathers, and we ſent to you, three ſummers ago, to do the ſame, but ſtill to keep them in view, in the roofs of your houſes, that they might be again uſed when neceſſary, in the defence of our lands, women and children.

"Brothers,

"Soon after we had agreed to lay by our arms the Americans begun to encroach upon our lands: when we have ſpoke to them about it, they have told us that our fathers, the Britiſh, gave them our lands to purchaſe peace from them; this we believed to be falſe, for not only the land was not theirs to give away for the ſhameful purpoſes as have been told us by the Americans, neither can we believe that our great father, the king, would conſent to diſtreſs his faithful children, who had ſhed their blood for him; ſuch a meaſure would be puniſhing us, when we merit reward.—One of our war captains is gone over the great waters to ſpeak, concerning theſe matters to our fathers; from him on his return, we ſhall know the truth.

"Brothers,

"We have heard, in our country, of the diſputes you have with the Georgians about your lands; it made our hearts glad to hear that you ſtruggled hard againſt them, and ſpilled the blood of thoſe bad people. You were the firſt to reſiſt ſuch injuſtice. This put us in mind of what we ought to do. We ſent to all our different tribes to meet at the great water-fall (Niagara) to conſult together for ſtopping the Americans, and confining them within their proper bounds.

"Brothers,

"We next and laſt held a great council near Detroit, where the chiefs of twenty-four nations, including Wabaſh and Ohio, met and conſulted: It was agreed upon, that we ſhould follow the example of our warlike and numerous brothers the Creeks, and we are ſent to conſult with you concerning the good of all. The Americans, laſt year, deſtroyed a Shawaneſe town; there were only women and children, except an old chief, in it, whom they carried away captives; but murdered the old man. This chief was a great friend of theirs, and uſed to ſide with them upon all occaſions. This we have told you, that you may not be deceived by their ſmooth talks. If ſuch be the way they treat their friends, ought not the knowledge of this to unite us all, to effect the deſtruction of ſo wicked a people, whoſe hearts are rotten?

"A large White Belt.

"This is a token from our Chiefs to yours; by this they deſire that you will conſider well what we the Warriors have ſpoken, and that you likewiſe will open your hearts, that we may ſee it, as we have done to you; we ſhall then return in haſte; our Chiefs of the Grand Council are now expecting us. We have been four moons on our journey hither, but we ſhall get home in three.

"Brothers,

"When our Great Council ſhall hear your talks they intend to inform the Americans of this friendly league of all the Red Nations, to defend their lands and families: that we have joined our hands and bodies from the Great Waterfall to Detroit, from thence to our brothers, the Creeks, forming a ſtrong wall of defence to maintain our lands; and that if they, the Americans, have forgot their boundary, we will deſcribe it to them; and that every American that paſſes over that limit, ſhall fall by the red hatchet and arrows of the war. The anſwer to this talk, if they give any, together with our reſolves, ſhall be made known to you by choſen Warriors of our nations, in five moons from our departure.

Answer of the Creek Chiefs.

"Brothers,

"WE are glad of your ſafe arrival in this country; and we receive with ſatisfaction the talks and tokens of friendſhip you have delivered us in the names of our elder brothers, the far off Chiefs and Warriors of the Northern Nations.

"Brothers,

"We have ſeen the talks and tokens that you ſent to us three ſummers ago, for laying down the ſharp weapons of war; the ſame talk we likewiſe ſaw from our late fathers, the Engliſh, one ſummer before yours came: we obeyed the talk, yet we did not ſpoil or bury our weapons, but kept them in ſight in the roofs of our houſes; we knew the people whoſe blood we had ſhed in the ſervice of the Engliſh to be revengeful. We had reaſon to be watchful, and upon our guard againſt them.

"Brothers,

"What you have heard of our quarrels with one of the Thirteen Fires of America is true. Thoſe people, on finding that the Engliſh had left our coaſts, thought it a good time to take an advantage of us. They ſuppoſed us to be heart-broken at being left alone—they began their revenge by endeavouring to ſtrip us of a great part of our lands next to their country. It is true that our hearts were ſunk within us for a while, but we rouſed ourſelves, and reſolved not to be trampled upon, nor ſit down and ſhed tears like women, but bravely to face the danger, great as it appeared, and ſtruggle ſtrongly to maintain our free ſtate, and to preſerve our lands for the ſupport of our wives and children; our attempts to this end you have heard.

"Brothers,

"The Americans do not ſpeak truth, when they tell you that our late fathers, the Engliſh, gave them the lands of their Red Children. On the contrary, if the Americans had taken and held faſt the talk that was agreed upon between them, they would not now be trying to take away the lands of the Red People, but we all would, as children and allies of the Engliſh, have been included in the peace, and ſuffered to remain quiet in our poſſeſſions; and we would only have been hunting wild beaſts to ſupport ourſelves and families, inſtead of being obliged to ſpill the blood of White Men in our own defence.

"Brothers,

"Our Chiefs tell us, that our fathers, the Engliſh, had always great ſucceſs in war; that they had, in former wars, overcome their enemies; and we are now told by thoſe that know, that all nations over the Great Water joined the Americans and overpowered our fathers, and forced them to leave the land to the Americans, who now call themſelves maſters of it. The land has been full of madneſs and confuſion for many ſummers paſt: it is ſtill ſo, and will continue ſo until (as likely to be) that thoſe very people over the Great Water, who assisted them, shall come and divide the country among them.

* Ten killed, one miſſing.

" Brothers.

" When the English left our coasts we were in great distress; they had taken our weapons of war from our hands and then retired to a great distance, out of our reach, and left us opposed to dangers without means of defence:—your case, brothers, is not so bad; if they had taken yours from you, yet they remained near you, and no doubt, if ever the day comes that you want their help, but they will stretch out their hands to you.

" The people that have sat down in the place of the English, on our coasts, have shewn us a good heart. As they have them not themselves, they have suffered certain of our English friends who used to supply us, to continue among them for the generous purpose of furnishing us with our customary goods, so that we are not in want of the necessaries needful for our families, as you see.

" Brothers.

" You do well not to be rash, but to warn the Americans of your discontents, to obtain satisfaction, which they will do, if their beloved men and chiefs are reasonable. When you have an answer let us know it, and we will advise with you. One of their beloved men was among us before you came; he is well informed of the causes of our differences and disputes with the Georgians; he is returned to the Great Council of the Americans, and we wait for the determination of that Council, which we expect to receive in three moons.

" Brothers.

" We take a strong hold with both hands, of the end of the great wampum of union; let the other end also be fast held by those near the Great Water Fall, and by all the Red People in the land between us, of the Chuccamaga, and Rivers Ohio and Wabash, whereby we shall form a strong chain of defence to save our lands, protect our wives, and rear our children, that they may long possess the inheritance we shall leave to them."

NAPLES, Auguſt 15.

BY letters from Sicily we have had a relation of an extraordinary eruption of Mount Ætna, ſuch a one as has not happened in the memory of man; a rumbling noiſe and numberleſs little ſhocks of earthquakes preceded this eruption; but on the 18th of laſt month, about three o'clock in the morning, a terrible volume of fire iſſued from the mountain like a whirlwind, and of ſuch a prodigious height, that it ſeemed as if the mountain was opened; and the column of fire appeared two-thirds higher than the ſummit. An immenſe cloud of ſmoke preceded the flame, the blaze of which was ſo great, that people could ſee to read at 20 miles diſtance; beſides that a ſhower of ſand, or calcined lava, and ſtones of an enormous ſize were caſt to a prodigious height, and fell down with a moſt terrible noiſe. Sulphurous ſtones, lightnings, and horrible noiſes followed this dreadful eruption.—The column of fire took its direction towards the Ionic Sea to the eaſtward of the coaſt of Morea, but at a certain diſtance it ſhifted towards Africa. We learn that the ſhower of ſand and ſtones fell on the city and ſuburbs of Meſſina and Calabria, and on all the iſlands and adjacent coaſts as far as Malta.

All the ice and ſnow on the tops of the mountains was melted, and ſome perſons wounded by the ſtones which fell in the neighbouring countries; the inhabitants ſuffered from a ſuffocating ſmell of ſulphur and bitumen, and from the extreme heat of the air, all the produce of the earth, the olives, fruits, and Indian corn are burnt; in ſhort, for many miles diſtance, the land reſembles the ſcorched deſarts of Lybia.

It is remarkable that Veſuvius at the ſame time began to ſend forth flames, and the lava flows at preſent along the valley which ſeparates that mountain from mount Somma.

LONDON, Sept. 15.

The following is a Copy of the Memorial from the Auſtrian Deputies to Prince Kaunitz, on the notice they received of his Imperial Majeſty's intentions:

"THE deputies of the ſtates of the Auſtrian Belgic provinces, who are proſtrate at the foot of the throne of their auguſt ſovereign, have ſeen with the moſt ſenſible grief their endeavours and hopes fruſtrated in not being able to obtain the proofs of his paternal tenderneſs, and that ſort of declaration, which, by terminating the evils and misfortunes of this nation, would have raiſed its gratitude to its higheſt pitch; inſtead of which, my Lord, our concern is augmented, and our alarms are redoubled, at the knowledge of theſe orders which his majeſty has reſolved to ſend to the government general of our provinces, and which you have deigned to communicate to us.

"The faithful inhabitants of thoſe provinces, full of confidence in his majeſty's paternal bounty, did not doubt but he would put the ſeal of approbation to the declarations which we were charged to ſolicit, and thereby renew the public confidence, without which commerce and induſtry muſt languiſh, if not become extinct, which will bring on a certain inactivity the bane of wealth. They hoped that a ſimple and preciſe declaration, tending to preſerve all our rights, uſages, and privileges which we had reaſon to expect from his majeſty, would recover in the minds of foreigners that confidence they have a right to expect from an upright honeſt people. Living peaceably under the protection of its wiſe & ancient conſtitution, which would have cauſed the national credit (greatly hurt by the fear of a new ſyſtem) to reſume its former vigour.—They alſo hoped, that the inhabitants of thoſe countries, who were ready to forſake their native ſoil by reaſon of internal diviſions, would ſeek and find an aſylum with them, which they certainly will not do now, until the new tribunals of juſtice are irrevocably ſuppreſſed, and the fatal intendancies aboliſhed by an expreſs declaration.

"In the orders ſent to government every one will ſee his majeſty relaxes in nothing relating to the eccleſiaſtical affairs, which are ſo ſtrongly linked with the rights and privileges of the other claſſes of citizens, that it ſeems as if it was all one intereſt. They will ſee that his majeſty, previous to entering into any deliberation whatſoever, requires the ſubſidies to be granted and paid, whilſt it has always been an invariable rule that the conſenting to the ſubſidies was dependent upon the exact obſervance of the privileges and liberties of the country.

"The penetration of your highneſs cannot fail to obſerve the cruel ſenſations which theſe orders will have on the minds of the Belgic people, as well as on thoſe of foreigners, as they muſt appear to be only given to ſtrengthen the new diſpoſitions iſſued in the ſacred name of his majeſty, and which are the ſubject of our juſt complaints.

"We are not ignorant, my lord, that his majeſty can employ that force which the Divine Providence has put into his hands; but will the goodneſs of his heart permit him to uſe means ſo contrary to the welfare of his ſubjects? Will he deliver his children to the deſtructive effects of military executions, and that only becauſe they remain attached to a conſtitution, which, in ſupporting the lawful power of the ſovereign, affects at the ſame time the happineſs of the people? Will the paternal tenderneſs of his majeſty ſuffer him to deſtroy his faithful ſubjects, inſtead of ruling them by their indigenous laws, which have cauſed their happineſs and proſperity for ſo many ages? Can ſuch deſtructive means be reconciled with the paternal diſpoſitions which he has deigned to profeſs for them, and which their inviolable fidelity has rendered them ſo worthy of? Will what his majeſty thinks due to his offended dignity be completed, if, to revenge it, he gives up his faithful ſubjects to ſo many horrors, thoſe ſubjects who are always ready to ſpend their wealth and blood in his defence, and for the glory of the country?

"We are, therefore, bold enough to implore your highneſs to deign to employ your good offices and great intereſt in our favour, and to inform his majeſty of our fears, that thereby we may obtain a repeal of thoſe orders, or ſome abatement of them, or, at leaſt the ſuſpenſion of the departure of the courier, that we may have time to give notice to our conſtituents, that they may, with the zeal that has always animated them, prepare the people for the ſad news, and endeavour to avoid thoſe evils, which, from the knowledge we have of the ſtate of things we cannot but expect and dread.

"Done at Vienna, Aug 16 1787.

Itaſtell, (Signed) DE COCK."

Sept. 24. On the 11th inſt. the ſtates of Holland and Weſt Frieſland, publiſhed a declaration, informing the citizens and inhabitants of the neceſſity they ſhould be under of inundating ſome of their diſtricts on the frontiers, at the ſame time obſerving, that they ſhould not make uſe of this indiſpenſible mean of defence, but when any foreign power might march troops into the territory of one of the Seven United Provinces, or when the province ſhould be abſolutely menaced with an invaſion; in which caſe all thoſe whoſe lands or habitation ſhould be laid under water, might be aſſured of a ſuitable indemnification. On the 12th inſt. their noble and great mightineſſes came to a definitive reſolution relative to the two memorials preſented the 9th, by the envoy of his Pruſſian majeſty. We learn that it tends to a reference to the anſwer remitted to that miniſter on Saturday the 8th inſt. offering to ſend two deputies to his majeſty, who ſhould verbally give the moſt ſatisfactory eeclairciſſement on the ſubject complained of. The magiſtrates of Amſterdam were of opinion, that the tenor of the memorials would not permit them to enter upon any deliberation on the ſubject; and they cauſed this declaration of their ſentiments to be inſerted on the regiſters.

Advices are ſaid with authority to have been received from Sir Robert Keith, K. B. informing his majeſty's miniſters, that the Porte had actually declared war againſt the Ruſſians. There has been a rumour for ſome days of this event having taken place, and the involved caſe of the two powers has given it probability. In the preſent perplexed ſtate of things, however, we are not ready to receive any report, however authoritatively delivered, with implicit confidence.

The accounts from Vienna ſay, the Ottoman miniſtry, on the 20th of July, invited M. de Bulgakow to a conference, at which the Reis Effendi preſided, and delivered the ſix following articles in the form of requiſitions:—

1. As they had found by experience, that the conſul, whom the court of Ruſſia had eſtabliſhed in Moldavia, was a reſtleſs and turbulent man, who endeavoured by every means to embroil the two empires, his highneſs abſolutely inſiſted on his being obliged to leave the Ottoman ſtates without delay.

2. As the troubles which had ſubſiſted for two years in Georgia, and had occaſioned ſo many complaints, had evidently reſulted from the protection granted by the empreſs to prince Heraclius of Georgia, contrary to the ſpirit of treaties, and diametrically oppoſite to the political connections which had ſubſiſted for ſome time, and which ſtill ſhould ſubſiſt between the ſublime Porte and Georgia, it was juſt that Ruſſia ſhould give orders for her troops to abandon Teflis and its environs, and to retire ſo far back as would be requiſite to re-eſtabliſh the tranquility of that country.

3. The Ruſſian veſſels that paſs by Conſtantinople, having always on board ſubjects of the Ottoman empire, who were inceſſantly ſeduced, and beſides, that the crews being in general guilty of conveying prohibited merchandize, his highneſs requires, that they all be viſited without exception.

4. The ſublime Porte having been informed with certainty, that the prince Alexander Maurocordato, who in the beginning of February had eſcaped from Yari, had been ſheltered in Ruſſia, where he had been practiſing all ſorts of machinations againſt his lawful ſovereign, demands that he be given up.

5. He requires a ſupply of ſalt from the Ruſſians to the Turks of Ocſokow, according to their wants.

6. His highneſs requires the eſtabliſhment of agents in the Ruſſian ſtates, for the protection of the commerce of his ſubjects.

The Ruſſian miniſter flatly refuſed the 2d and 3th of theſe articles; and added, that he was permitted to write upon the ſubject to his ſovereign, He ſaid the ſame of the 5th, and as to the laſt, he begged it might be taken ad referendum, as he had not ſufficient inſtructions on that head. As to the 3d. M. de Bulgakow inſiſted, that viſiting the cargoes was contrary to the ſubſiſting treaties, and that his court would never permit it.

This conference laſted for a conſiderable time—but that which the Ruſſian miniſter demanded and obtained, on the 30th of July, with the Reis Effendi, was much ſhorter—for M. de Bulgakow was not permitted to inſiſt on the pretenſions of his court.

If it be true that the diſpute has broken forth into declared war, the poſture of the emperor will be materially changed. His cloſe alliance with the empreſs, and their enormous ambition, have juſtly ſtirred the ſuſpicion of Europe, and they will find themſelves engaged in a moſt important ſtruggle.

Prince William, during his viſit to the Leeward Iſlands and Jamaica, ſhewed ſuch extraordinary attachment to the young females of Africa, that his excellency is ſtiled by the generality of the ſeamen in that part of the globe—the Black Prince.

AMERICA.

CHARLOTTE-TOWN, (N. Scotia) Sept. 15.

On Tueſday the 4th inſtant, the ſhip Kitty, capt. Drummond, from London and Briſtol, arrived here; ſhe left Briſtol the 9th of July, and was, by ſtreſs of weather, put into the Cove of Cork, from which ſhe made her paſſage to this port in thirty days.

The Kitty is a remarkable fine frigate built ſhip, about three hundred tons burthen, was purchaſed and fitted out at London by Mr. John Patterſon, who, with his lady and family, came in her with a determination to ſettle and carry on trade upon this iſland.

Miſſes Neſbitt, Mrs M'Mullen, major Antil, (formerly of New-York) lieutenant Lethbridge, of his majeſty's Royal American Regiment, and a number of valuable ſettlers came paſſengers.

We learn that Mr. Patterſon is determined to employ the Kitty as an annual ſhip, to ply between this iſland, the Weſt-Indies, and London; and that a number of people in England have reſolved to become ſettlers here, and are to take their paſſage in her next ſpring.

PORTSMOUTH, (N. H.) Nov. 3.

A woman reſiding in this town, not famous for living upon the moſt friendly terms with her huſband, conſtantly made it a practice, when an attack commenced, and was likely to turn againſt her, to run into the ſtreet and ſcream murder. The neighbours were often alarmed by her midnight ſhrieks, but finding they only proceeded from too great a fondneſs for Sir Richard, grew callous to her cries and generally left her to ſettle the diſpute with her own weapons. A few evenings ſince, a furious battle commenced, and my lady finding but little attention paid to her former cries of murder, took the expedient of crying fire! this ſhe vociferated in ſuch accents as immediately alarmed the neighbours, who came running, puffing, and blowing, and crying "where is the fire? where is the fire? here it is, ſaid the good woman; my huſband has been beating me in the moſt cruel manner, and I knew if I cried murder all night not one of you would have come to my aſſiſtance. Upon inveſtigation, the neighbours could diſcover no material fire, but found it only conſiſted in a ſlight ſpecimen of that fire which judge Minos puniſhes ſuch wretches with, as proſtitute their time and talents, enervate their conſtitutions, and deſtroy their uſefulneſs to ſociety, by an unlimited gratification of that pernicious article, rum.

BOSTON, November 15.

Beſides the articles under the foreign heads, on the authority of a gentleman, who arrived yeſterday from England, we inform, that the Prince of Orange, aſſiſted by fifteen thouſand troops of the King of Pruſſia, has borne down all oppoſition—and is reinſtated in all his powers, dignities and privileges in Holland—and that the Dutch patriots have promiſed entire ſatisfaction for the indignity offered to the Princeſs of Orange, during her journey to the Hague. Thus we ſee the efforts of patriotiſm—"without a hand to ſuccour or an arm to ſave"—cruſhed by the ultima ratio of kings—and from hence we may date the decline of the Dutch republics—for the deſtruction of commerce, the ſource of their former greatneſs, follows the triumphs of arbitrary power.

On Saturday laſt the honorable Samuel A. Otis, Eſquire, took his leave of the honorable Houſe of Repreſentatives, and on Monday laſt, with the honorable George Thacher, Eſquire, ſat out for New-York, to take their ſeats in Congreſs.

Tueſday laſt the honorable Houſe of Repreſentatives appointed the honorable James Warren, Eſq. commiſſioner for diſpoſing of the weſtern lands, belonging to this commonwealth.

Same day a bill for incorporating ſundry perſons into a "ſociety for propagating the goſpel among the Indians, and other parts," was read a ſecond time, and a time aſſigned for a third reading.

The bill, ſays a correſpondent, for propagating the goſpel among the Indians, &c. read in the Houſe of repreſentatives on Tueſday, had a clauſe in it, providing, that the perſons who ſhould be ſent for purpoſes mentioned in the bill, ſhould be of the Proteſtant profeſſion. When it was read, Dr. Cony (member from Hallowell) roſe and obſerved that as good men were to be found in every profeſſion—and as it was not conſonant with the enlightened ideas of the preſent day, to make particular creeds the conſideration of eligibility to any appointments, he moved that the clauſe might be ſtruck out of the bill—which meeting with the cordial acquieſcence of the whole houſe, was immediately done.

Monday was raiſed the frame of a meeting houſe on the ſpot where formerly ſtood one which was deſtroyed by the late deſtructive fire in this town.

WORCESTER, Nov. 15.

Died at Northborough, October 31ſt, very ſuddenly, Captain Bezaleel, in the 74th year of his age, formerly a repreſentative for the town of Weſtborough in the general court. He was a perſon well known, and as well reſpected; and his death is much lamented. He was a ſenſible, honeſt, worthy man, and has left behind him a fair character, and a good name.

The manner of his death was as follows: retiring from a lecture, he mounted his horſe, in the view of a number of people, but not being properly ſeated, and not having full poſſeſſion of the bridle (as was ſuppoſed) his horſe, lively and gay, immediately ſet out upon the run, and threw him againſt a ſtone wall, whereby his brains were inſtantly daſhed out, perhaps not more than thirty yards from where he firſt mounted. Several perſons ran to him as he fell, but diſcovered not the leaſt ſign of life in him, except the motion of the lungs; which continued near an hour, and then he expired, probably without any ſenſe of pain, as it was without the leaſt motion of any limb, or part of the body.

NEW-YORK, Nov. 21.

The honorable William Patterſon, Eſq. of New-Jerſey, having declined to accept of the appointment of a delegate in Congreſs from that ſtate, the honorable Jonathan Dayton, Eſq. of Elizabeth-Town, has been elected in his ſtead.

Cool heads are clear (ſaith a writer in the Boſton Independent Chronicle) the ſtar of wiſdom does not ſhine in a ſtorm, therefore brethren of the United States, turn your backs upon all fiery declaimers againſt the conſtitution—Keep the ſky of reaſon clear, hold the ſcale of truth even, and give every argument its weight, and no more. Think much, hear much, read ſome, and talk but little; aſk wiſdom of God, and act as you think in your ſerious hours will be for his glory, and the happineſs of this great nation. Then, "although our Iſrael ſhould not proſper, you will be happy in your conſcious rectitude," and glorious in the ſight of the Lord.

By the UNITED STATES in CONGRESS aſſembled.
A Contract for a Loan of one million Guilders.

Tranſlation from the Dutch.

(Seal.) WOLFF.

ON the firſt day of June, in the year one thouſand ſeven hundred and eighty-ſeven, appeared before me, Peter Galenus Van Hole, notary of Amſterdam, admitted by the honorable court of Holland;

His excellency the honorable John Adams, Eſq; miniſter plenipotentiary on the part of the United States of America, &c. &c. in quality, as eſpecially empowered and authoriſed by the above-mentioned States of America, in Congreſs aſſembled, for and in behalf of ſaid States of America, to raiſe a loan with any perſon or perſons, ſtates or companies, with ſubjoined aſſurance in good faith to ratify and fulfil all that ſhall be done in this reſpect, by him, honorable appearer, according to authentic copy and tranſlation of the original commiſſion or power exhibited to me, notary, and depoſited in my cuſtody, in behalf of the joint money lenders.

The honorable appearer reſiding in London, but being now in this city.

And the honorable appearer acknowledged himſelf in his aforeſaid quality, and thus in the name and in behalf of the above-mentioned States of America, to be duly and lawfully indebted to and in behalf of ſundry perſons or money lenders, in all, a ſum of one million of guilders, Dutch current money, ariſing from and on account of ſo much ready money received by him the honorable appearer, in his aforeſaid quality, to his perfect ſatisfaction, from the ſaid money lenders, purſuant to the receipt hereafter mentioned to be ſigned by the honorable appearer, under the authentic copies hereof; expreſsly and formally diſavowing the excuſe of untold monies.

And the honorable appearer promiſed in his aforeſaid quality, to repay and reimburſe in this city, the ſaid ſum of one million of guilders, free from all coſts, charges and damages to the above-mentioned money lenders or their aſſigns, at the expiration of fifteen years, after the firſt day of June 1787, and that in the following manner, to wit:

That the above-mentioned principal ſhall remain fixed during the ſpace of ten years, and that with the eleventh year, and thus, on the firſt day of June, 1798, a fifth part, or two hundred thouſand guilders of the ſaid principal of one million ſhall be redeemed, and in the ſame manner from year to year, until the firſt day of June, 1802, incluſive; ſo that the whole principal ſhall be redeemed and diſcharged within the above-mentioned ſpace of fifteen years.

And that mean while for ſaid principal, at firſt for the whole, and afterwards for the reſidue, at the expiration of every year, intereſt ſhall be paid at the rate of five per cent. in the year, commencing on the 1ſt day of June, 1787, and to continue until the final accompliſhment, and that on coupons, to be ſigned by, or on the part of ſaid honorable appearer, in his aforeſaid quality.

That the above-mentioned redeeming ſhall be performed by drawing, in the preſence of a notary and witneſſes in this city, after the expiration of the firſt mentioned ten years, in ſuch a manner that the Nos. of the bonds or obligations drawn ſhall be betimes made known in the public papers.

That the payment of the intereſts, as alſo the redeeming of the reſpective periods ſhall be made at the compting-houſes of the hereafter mentioned gentlemen, directors, or at ſuch other places within this city as ſhall likewiſe be advertiſed in the public papers.

That the directors of this negociation ſhall be Meſſieurs Wilhelm and Jan Willink, and Nicolaas and Jacob Van Staphorſt, of this city, merchants, who are by theſe preſents thereto named and appointed by the honorable appearer, in his aforeſaid quality.

The honorable appearer promiſing and engaging in the names of his conſtituents, that the amount of the intereſts and of the redeemings to be made from time to time of the ſaid principal, ſhall be in due time remitted to the aforeſaid gentlemen directors, their heirs or ſucceſſors, in good bills of exchange, American products, or in ready money, without any abatement or deduction whatſoever.

That this bond or obligation ſhall never be ſubject to any impoſts or taxes already laid, or in time to come to be laid, in the ſaid United States of America, or any of them, even in caſe (which God forbid) any war, hoſtilities or diviſions, ſhould ariſe between aforeſaid United States, or any of them on the one ſide, and the States of theſe Lands on the other, and, that the payment of the principal or intereſts of this bond or obligation, accordingly, can, in no wiſe, nor under any pretext whatſoever, be hindered or delayed.

The honorable appearer, in his aforeſaid quality, promiſing and engaging, moreover, for, and in the names of the ſaid United States, that there ſhall never be made, or entered into by them, or on their parts, or any of them in particular, any convention or treaty, public or private, at the making of peace, or otherwiſe, by which the validity and accompliſhment of theſe preſents might be prejudiced, or, whereby any thing contrary thereto might be ſtipulated, but, that without any exception the contents hereof ſhall be kept and maintained in full force.

The honorable appearer, in his aforeſaid quality, likewiſe promiſes, engages and binds himſelf by theſe preſents, that this engagement ſhall be ratified and approved as ſoon as poſſible by ſaid United States in Congreſs aſſembled, and, that authentic copy, tranſlation of ſaid ratification, with the original, ſhall be depoſited in cuſtody of me the ſaid notary, to be there kept with ſaid authentic copy tranſlation of the commiſſion or power of him, honorable appearer, and the engroſſed hereof for the ſecurity of the money lenders, until the above-mentioned principal and intereſts as aforeſaid ſhall be redeemed and paid off.

And there ſhall be made of this act, (as the honorable appearer in his aforeſaid quality conſents) above and beſides the abovementioned engroſſed, one thouſand authentic copies, which ſhall be of the ſame force and value, and have the ſame effect as the engroſſed one, under every one of which copies ſhall be placed a receipt of one thouſand guilders, Dutch current money, either in name or in blank, at the choice of the money lenders, to be ſigned by him, honorable appearer, and which receipts ſhall be reſpectively numbered from No. 1. to 1000, incluſive, and counterſigned by the above mentioned gentlemen directors, and duly recorded by me the ſaid notary, as a teſtimony that no more than one thouſand bonds or obligations are numbered by virtue of this act.

All which authentic copies with the receipts there under placed, ſhall, at the redeeming of the principal, be reſtored by the bearers.

On failure of prompt payment, as well of the principal as of the intereſts at the appointed periods, the principal or reſidue thereof may be demanded by the gentlemen directors, in behalf of the money lenders, who ſhall be then intereſted therein, and the aforeſaid conſtituents and committents of him, honorable appearer, ſhall in that caſe be held and bound to redeem and diſcharge immediately, in one ſum, the remaining principal, with the intereſts and charges; for the accompliſhment and performance of all the above written the honorable appearer binds in his aforeſaid quality, and thus in the names and on the part of the abovementioned United States of America, the ſaid United States of America jointly, and each of them in particular, together with all their lands, chattles, revenues and products, and alſo the impoſts and taxes already laid, and raiſed in the ſame, or in time to come to be laid and raiſed, and thus of all the United States of America jointly, and each of them in particular, and for the whole.

He, the honorable appearer, renouncing in the names as above, for that purpoſe expreſsly, beneficium diviſionis, as likewiſe de duobus vel pluribus reis debendi, ſignifying a retribution of debts, and that when two or more are indebted, each of them can ſatisfy with the payment of his portion: The honorable appearer promiſing in his aforeſaid quality, never to have recourſe to the ſaid or to any other evaſions whatſoever.

This being paſſed, (after tranſlation into Engliſh was made hereof, and which likewiſe is ſigned by the honorable appearer, and depoſited in the cuſtody of me the ſaid notary) within Amſterdam aforeſaid, in the preſence of Martinus Gerardus Brondgeeſt, and Jacob de Wolff, witneſſes.

JOANNES VERGEEL LAC SON,
Sworn Tranſlator

The ratification of the above contract by the United States in Congress assembled, is in the words following:

Be it remembered, That the within contract or engagement entered into by the honorable John Adams, minister plenipotentiary of the United States of America, to their high mightinesses the lords the states general of the United Netherlands, in behalf of the said states, with sundry money lenders, for a loan of one million of guilders, Dutch current money, dated at Amsterdam, the first day of June, 1787; hath been read in Congress, approved and ratified, and declared obligatory on the United States of America.

DONE in the City Hall, in the City of New-York, by the United States in Congress assembled, this eleventh day of October, in the year of our Lord one thousand seven hundred and eighty-seven, and in the twelfth year of our sovereignty and independence.

Philadelphia, Nov. 26.

Saturday last, in the Convention of this state, the honorable Mr. M'Kean made the following motion—"That this Convention do assent to and ratify the constitution agreed to on the 17th of September last, by the Convention of the United States of America, held at Philadelphia."

This motion was seconded by Mr. Allison, of Franklin, but as it was not expected to be immediately agreed to, after some conversation the house adjourned till three o'clock this afternoon.

In the general assembly on Thursday the 15th inst. Mr. Fitzsimons said, The house yesterday on my motion came to a resolution for appropriating the money raised by the late lottery, to the sole purpose of improving the road to the westward of this city: I proposed that resolution under the impression, that as the sum was so small, not exceeding 1700l. it could not be applied with advantage to the two objects of the bill under which it was raised; one of them it might be of service to; but he had since learned that the half of it could be usefully employed in clearing or improving the navigation of the river Schuylkill, therefore he was for adhering to the original institution of the law, and begged the motion might be reconsidered.

Mr. Peters thought the resolution was agreed to yesterday without due consideration, and therefore hoped it might be reconsidered; he was of opinion that an alteration in the application of money from the original purpose, was in some degree a breach of the public faith, and he was pretty confident that many persons had engaged in that lottery, on the expectation of the profits being applied to the improvement of the Schuylkill; if so, it was absolutely deceiving those and violating our faith, to alter the use from what they believe they were contributing toward.

Mr. Fitzsimons had made the motion yesterday, under the opinion, that a division of so small a sum would defeat both objects, but the application of the whole to one might be useful.

Two of the gentlemen who had been on the committee were of opinion, that the original intention of the law might be adhered to, and the half laid out beneficially in the improvement of the river, whereupon they had agreed to bring the matter again before the house. as they were unable to report in favour of the motion. There had been something singular in the appropriation of this money from the beginning. When the scheme of the lottery was first set on foot, one of the objects was a particular accommodation to the city, by erecting an exchange; this was continued in the bill during the publication, and only struck out when the bill was passing into a law on the third reading; to this alteration might in some measure be attributed the deficiency in what was expected to be raised; the act likewise had an expression in it which appeared to leave the application to any future house: the words are, "agreeably to the laws now existing, or laws which may hereafter be enacted for that purpose." But since he had heard the moiety of the money could be usefully employed on the river, he cheerfully gave up the intention of applying the whole to the roads. He hoped some gentlemen would also inform the house of the advantages, in order to induce them to rescind their vote of yesterday.

Mr. Lollar. It clearly appears to be the intention of the law to have each moiety applied to the purposes already mentioned, let the amount of it be great or small, wherefore he would vote for a reconsideration.

The house agreed to reconsider—and in consequence of an intimation from the Speaker it was proposed by Mr. Fitzsimons to amend his motion by inserting after "for the improvement of the public roads," the words "and for the improvement of the navigation of the river Schuylkill," which amendment was agreed to.

A desultory conversation arose upon two or three alterations that were proposed, and Mr. M'Lene did not approve of the commissioners being appointed by the house. He thought this a power the council ought to exercise—and they could do it better than the house, for they might employ this money by contract, and hence would arise a great saving.

Mr. Clymer thought this observation merited attention, and wished the committee to be left free on this point, whether in the bill they should report commissioners to expend the money, or leave it to council to act as they might judge proper.

Mr. Lollar advocated the same idea, but as the motion could not be moulded at the table to suit every gentleman's wishes, it was moved by Mr. Clymer to postpone for a little time, in order that another resolution might be framed.

This was agreed to; and after a short time the business was again brought forward—when it was determined to leave the mode of application to the supreme executive council; and the same committee as were appointed yesterday, were now re-appointed and ordered to bring in a bill accordingly.

Extract of a letter from Thomas Baldwin, Esq; author of a late ingenious publication, on the subject of Balloons, called Airopaidia, to his friend in Liverpool (England.)

St. Helen's, Aug. 19, 1787.

"SIR,

"Though you are situated only at the distance of twelve miles from this improving town; which, like your own, owes its origin and present flourishing state to the industry of its present inhabitants; you by means of the watery element, and the people here by FIRE, from the inexhaustible beds of coal with which this country is almost every where furnished: yet, I am inclined to think, you are wholly uninformed with respect to one of our natural curiosities (more remarkable than Camden's Burning Well) which this neighbourhood at present affords; has done so for six months past, and may probably for some years continue to exhibit: It indeed wants only to be known, in order to excite attention, and engage travellers of every rank, as well foreigners as natives, to take the route of St. Helen's, stop at the Raven Inn, and become eye witnesses of phœnomena so very extraordinary.

"At the distance of twenty minutes ride, or walk through the fields along the Sankey Canal, in a pleasant meadow, near a place called Stansey Copper Works (which are as well worth seeing as these at St. Helen's) is a large pond of water, the central surface of which is violently agitated with incessant ebullition, like the famous fountain at Holywell, in Flintshire, that supplies so many mills, and throws out so many tons of water in a minute.

"Near this pond is a coal pit-eye, almost filled with water, which is equally agitated with the water of the pond; a brook likewise, which runs in meanders thro' the meadow, has in many places the appearance of Boiling Springs. All these are in fact no other than fountains of Liquid Fire, issuing from the bowels of the earth, well known to miners by the name of fiery damp, and to chymists by that of inflammable air.

"I have made several experiments on different ebullitions, and find that they will, any of them, instantly kindle into a flame, like a spirit lamp, at the approach of a common candle, or end of a blazing rope. The illuminations are large, bright, and peculiarly striking, in a calm cloudy evening. By means of empty bladders previously softened in water, each of which must be tied successively over the end of a tin funnel; which being inverted, and its bottom held beneath the surface of these bubbling springs, I have caught and carried away, for experiments at leisure, as much inflammable air as I have had occasion to make use of.

"Five or six balloons, each large enough to float two persons, may there be filled in less than an hour.

"As a balloonist, I could not help wishing for Blanchard or Lunardi, or any one who has a balloon ready for filling which may there be done in the least time, and at the least expence.

"This inflammable air is of a sweet scent, like that of the small volcano at Pietræ Mala, on the Appenines, which I have more than once described to you.

"As the quantity generated is probably encreasing, you may perhaps hear further on the subject.

I remain, SIR, &c. THOMAS BALDWIN."

A letter received by the Hector, arrived at New-York from Liverpool, dated Sept. 29, says, "We are all in a bustle, preparing for war; for this week past the press for seamen has been so hot that no vessel, inward or outward bound, escaped being boarded. The man of war here, we believe, is so full of men, that they are obliged to let the outward bound vessels pass this day. It is however the general opinion, that we will not have war; but that the present bold measure is to intimidate the French from interfering with the King of Prussia, in the work he has begun, of replacing the Stadtholder The present rumour has had no effect upon the prices of American and West India produce."——The letter concludes with observing, that one week after its date would determine, whether Great Britain was to be at peace or war.

Agreeably to a report from the committee of ways and means, the Assembly has resolved, that the excise should be doubled, that an additional duty of 2d per gallon be laid on Madeira wines, 1d. per gallon on all other wines, 1s. per dozen on wines imported in bottles, 1d. per lb. on bohea teas imported, 3d. per lb. on all other teas, and 1d. per lb. on coffee. Mr. Peters proposed, that a duty of 6d. per bushel be laid upon salt, but his motion was lost by a majority of 31 rising against it. The house then appointed committees to bring in the necessary bills for carrying into effect the resolutions they had adopted, and for the better collection of the excise and the taxes,

On the same day the Luzerne bill was taken up for a third reading, when Mr. Kennedy moved that the power given to council for raising troops to keep the peace of that country, should be limited to the enlistment of 150 men. This motion was so evidently contrary to the sense of the house, that it was after some debate withdrawn, and an amendment proposed by Mr. Lewis for striking out any limitation, unanimously adopted. Council have therefore the power to employ as many troops as shall be adequate to the service.

A very long and animated debate arose upon a clause moved to be added to the same bill by Mr. Findley, the object of which was to ascertain the meaning and extent of the word Acquired, used in the former act, by declaring that "actual settlement and occupancy since the decree at Trenton, should alone be deemed an acquired right of property, and that the said right should be limited to 300 acres, with 6 per cent. for roads." The clause was agreed to, 46 members being in favor of it, and 16 against it.

We are informed that a gentleman in this city has received a letter from Holland, which says that the Stadtholder has opened the sluices of Amsterdam, and laid the whole city under water; that he had taken possession of Rotterdam, where he immediately caused seven of the patriots to be executed, and that the French and English have remained passive spectators of this tragical scene.

The FOX and BRAMBLE,

A FABLE.

A Fox closely pursued, thought it prudent and meet
To a bramble for refuge all in haste to retreat;
He enter'd the covert, but entering he found,
That briars and thorns did on all sides abound,
And that though he was safe, yet he never could stir,
But his sides they would wound, or would tear off his fur.
He shrugg'd up his shoulders, but would not complain,
To repine at small evils (quoth Reynard) is vain,
That no bliss is perfect I very well know
But from the same source good and evil both flow:
And full sorely my skin, tho' these briars may rend,
Yet they keep off the dogs, and my life will defend.
For the sake of the good, then, let evil be borne,
For each sweet has its bitter, each bramble its thorn.

LEGISLATIVE BON-MOT.

ON Wednesday the memorial presented to the General Assembly by the college of physicians, against the excessive use of spiritous liquors, was taken up for a second reading, and having occasioned some wit and mirth at the expence of that learned body, it was proposed to give the memorialists leave to bring in a bill——"No, no! exclaimed Mr. Peters, I hope the house will never agree to that, for I am sure I have smarted enough already under bills of their bringing in."

Philadelphia, October 16, 1787.

For Griſt Mills & other Water Works

On an extenſive Plan,
One of the beſt ſituations in America is offered

FOR SALE,

Together With

Batſto Iron-Works,

At the forks of Little Egg-Harbour river, one of the moſt healthy ſpots in New Jerſey, 38 miles by land from Philadelphia, and within a few hours ſail of New York.

THE river, communicating with the ſea by the beſt inlet on the Jerſey coaſt, is navigable for veſſels of 200 tons within a few miles of the works; thoſe of 100 tons may approach within one mile; flats and ſcows, carrying 10 or 12 tons, load and unload at the works. The uſual freight to New York or Philadelphia is 10 ſhillings per ton. The furnace ſtream affords plenty of water, in the dryeſt ſeaſon, for 3 or 4 pair of mill ſtones, beſides ſupplying the iron works.——An excellent dam, which has been increaſing in ſtrength many years by the cinder from the furnace, is well ſecured from the danger of freſhes, and the works are ſcarcely ever injured or delayed by either ice or back-water, though the tide ſwells to the foot of the dam: mills may therefore be erected at a moderate expence. This being a part of the country in which many people and many teams are neceſſarily employed in collecting and preparing for market the iron and lumber with which it abounds, and at the ſame time illy adapted to the raiſing of grain for their ſupport, there is, and muſt continue to be, a demand for large quantities of midlings, cornell, ſhorts and bran, at advanced prices; and the convenience of conveying flour at a light expence, either to New York or Philadelphia, or to more diſtant markets, will not be overlooked nor conſidered as of ſmall importance, eſpecially as there are few mill ſeats of any conſiderable capacity equally adapted to the New York market, which is not unfrequently ſupplied with ſuperfine flour from Philadelphia. A choice of the various kinds of wheat may be drawn to this ſeat from Virginia, Maryland, Delaware, New Jerſey, and New York with greater eaſe and convenience than to almoſt any other mills now in being.

The FURNACE, which by the extenſive lands annexed to it, is abundantly ſupplied with wood and ore, is now in blaſt, and is noted for producing the beſt hollow ware in America, the metal being peculiarly well adapted to the making of caſtings of all kinds, as well as excellent bar iron.

A FORGE, with four fires and two hammers, belongs to the eſtate, and ſtands about half a mile from the furnace, on another fine ſtream which affords plenty of water.

A SLITTING and ROLLING MILL, having been diſuſed for the laſt two or three years, may want ſome repairs to prepare it for uſe; but the fore-bays and gates are in perfect order, and being in the proper ſpot for griſt mills, may be appropriated to that uſe.

Two SAW MILLS in good order, and a ſmall Griſt Mill.

The MANSION HOUSE is elegantly ſituated about 100 yards from the furnace, on an height which commands a view of the whole works, and of the two villages formed by the ſurrounding buildings belonging to the eſtate, ſuch as barns, ſtables, coal houſes, workſhops, ſtorehouſes and dwellings for work men. Adjoining the manſion houſe is a large and fruitful garden, affording plenty of vegetables, and well ſtored with choſen fruit trees; alſo a young bearing orchard, containing near 2000 apple trees, moſtly grafted.

Theſe excellent accommodations for extenſive and profitable manufactories, are offered to ſale at a very low rate and on terms of payment calculated for the eaſe of the purchaſer who may pay the greater part in the produce of the Iron Works, at a price to be agreed upon; and they are capable of producing more in one year, than will pay the whole price demanded.

For particulars, apply to WILLIAM RICHARDS, at the ſaid Works, JOHN COX, at Bloomſbury, near Trenton, or CHARLES PETTIT, in Philadelphia.

PHILADELPHIA: Printed and Sold by JOHN DUNLAP and DAVID C. CLAYPOOLE;
On the South ſide of Market-ſtreet, the third Houſe Eaſt of Second-ſtreet, where Subſcriptions, Advertiſements, &c. for this Paper, are thankfully received, and PRINTING in its different Branches is done with Care, Elegance and Expedition ——Subſcribers to this Paper (in the city) are ſerved with it at their Houſes early every Morning, and thoſe at a diſtance by the quickeſt Conveyance.

FELLOW CITIZENS,

THE object of our present attention is the establishment of a permanent government for ourselves and posterity; than which, except what immediately concerns eternal salvation, no object of greater magnitude can be offered to human consideration.

History does not afford an instance exactly parallel with the present—a people highly civilized, in an enlightened age, in profound peace, the wisdom of the world in their hands, all theory before their eyes, and all experiment within their knowledge, resolving themselves, as it were, into a state of nature, to institute a system of government, which is to characterize their country, and on which their political happiness and safety is to depend. I say, history does not furnish an instance of such a people, so employed, and under like circumstances.

The only practicable mode of commencing this important business has been adopted. Delegates have been appointed by the respective states for the purpose of framing a system of government, and proposing it to the consideration of the people at large. In this first step you have shewn a discretion and propriety not usual in popular elections. I mean as to the persons whom you appointed to this difficult and important service, your most precious and admired characters were brought together on this occasion—men most eminent for wisdom and integrity—men whose judgments could not be warped by any personal interests whatever, who were themselves to partake of the good or evil of the fruits of their deliberations—men whose attachment to their country cannot be doubted, and whose competency to the business in hand, has never been disputed. One partiality alone could influence the component parts of that most respectable body, the late Convention; and that I conceive to be a happy influence. The delegates from the respective states would naturally, and from a sense of duty, be jealous and watchful, that in the formation of a general government, no more of the specific rights or interests of each state should be sacrificed, than was absolutely necessary for the dignity, safety, and good government of the United States; and therefore, it may be supposed, as the fact really was, that they have made the best compromise of complicated interests, which the nature of the case would allow; so that the present question is not whether the government proposed is the best of all possible governments, theoretically considered; although if fairly investigated, it might stand even this test. But whether a better union of separate sovereignties can be obtained; or which is of still greater importance, whether if the proposed system should be rejected, the states will ever again make the same compromise.

The theory of government hath employed the pens of speculative and learned men in every age; and yet no system hath ever been formed which is not liable to many positive and many more probable evils and objections. A scheme of government which shall invest the rulers with efficient powers, without a possibility of these powers being in any instance abused or misapplied, should be sought for by those only who are looking for the Philosopher's stone, or the perpetual motion. But supposing it were possible to form a political system unexceptionable in theory, it would be found unexceptionable in theory only. The temper, genius, and internal circumstances of the country to which it is to be applied, must be considered, otherwise the people might be very unhappy under this best of all possible schemes.

In governments, two extremes are positively evil—an uncontrouled and unresponsible tyranny on the one hand, and such a relaxed state on the other, as is insufficient for defence or good order, in which all men are put upon a level without regard to virtue, merit, or abilities, and in which, he who can practise most upon the credulity and indolence of the multitude, will have the best opportunities of gratifying his ambition and avarice. Between these extremes are many degrees of excellence; many combinations of forms and dispositions of delegated power, which may be suited to the circumstances of different nations, and yet all liable to ingenious objections by those who may think it their interest to magnify possible evils, and hold up imaginary dangers.

If a people should remain without any government, until a system could be framed so seemingly perfect in itself, as to be impregnable to all criticism, they would wait till fallable man should do that which the Deity at least hath not done. The government of the Jews, which was a pure theocracy, was not so perfect, but that people frequently murmured and rebelled.

After our struggles for liberty and independence were crowned with acknowledged success, the politicians of Europe looked to see the sun of our glory rise; but a long night hath followed. Our fœderal union hath become insignificant—almost contemptible. No one will be so hardy as to assert that our situation as a nation, is either happy or honourable. And how long shall we remain in this situation?—Until all mal-contents shall be satisfied? Until the unanimous consent of the people shall be obtained? Be not deceived—those who oppose this constitution, under a pretended zeal for the liberties of the people, would with equal zeal, and under the same pretences, oppose every other that could be offered. I know not how it may be in the other states, but in Pennsylvania we need only look at the men to know their motives. If we wait till these men are satisfied, we shall wait till some Shays, some desperate adventurer shall rise in the blast of popular confusion into influence and importance, and frame a government for us in a camp. And then, a very short answer will suffice for all objections real and imaginary.

It is time—it is high time that we had an efficient government, in which the wisdom and strength of the United States may be concentered. The Fable of the man and his sons and the bundle of sticks, may with propriety be extended beyond the usual interpretation of mere mental concord. The moral of the Fable requires not only a bundle of sticks, but a bundle of sticks bound together for a union of strength. An efficient fœderal government is the only cord that can bind our states together for any length of time. For want of this bond of union, Rhode-Island, which is but a twig in the bundle, hath already shewn symptoms of disaffection.

The establishment of a good and respectable government for the United States, was an event which the leading men of a party in Pennsylvania neither wished for, nor expected. Their hope was, that the delegates from the different states would never unite in any system. But it was discovered that a frame of government was indeed likely to be fixed upon, and was nearly ripe for promulgation, some of the party were so indiscreet as to declare their intended opposition, even before they knew the system they were determined to oppose. But the more cunning, though not less adverse, waited till the Convention had announced their plan, and even then, these politicians affected to be in its favour, and wish its success, until by an unexpected motion in the house of assembly, they were compelled to throw off the mask, and declare themselves openly. They wished to prevent even the first step for bringing the fœderal government into existence. They saw plainly, that a majority of the house would be for recommending it to the people of the state at large to appoint delegates in their behalf to consider, and if proper, give the assent of this state to the proposed plan. In this emergency they played off a stroke of wicked policy, which the same party had once before found successful. As many of the mal-contents, or rather tools of real mal-contents, as were sufficient to break up the house, abandoned their seats; but even this manœuvre did not answer the purpose. An accident not looked for, defeated the pernicious intent, and the house have legally, and in complete organization, recommended that a State Convention should be called, and pointed out the time and mode of doing it.

The disappointed partizans are now filling the news-papers with loud outcries against the proposed constitution. They have invoked Hecate to their aid; called up vosty spirits from the deep, and presented raw head and bloody-bones to the people; weak and nervous politicians are even terrified by their incantations. But the fallacy consists in this: These writers consider the proposed constitution as vesting governmental powers in strangers to be imported from. God knows what country, whose interests and those of the people of the United States are not only separate from, but opposed to each other. And in this view they descant largely on the dangers and evils to be apprehended. Upon no other ground can their arguments prove of any force. But the truth is, that this fœderal assembly, this senate, and this president of the United States are to be composed of our own brethren; of men of our own appointment, taken from amongst ourselves; whose interests must go hand in hand with ours; who, if they do evil, must partake of that evil. If they enslave others, they cannot leave their own children free. If they involve the country in ruin, they cannot provide a Goshen for themselves, their families and friends; for their power will neither be perpetual nor hereditary. The constitution ordains a frequent recurrence to the people for the choice of their legislators and principal officers, all of whom are responsible for their conduct, and the component parts of the system mutually controul and check each other, in all cases where checks and controuls are consistent with good government.

But this good constitution may be corrupted and abused, say the opposers; and so indeed it may. From a like argument, divine wisdom would have never made man, because his body is subject to disorders; much less would man have been entrusted with freedom of will, because it is too manifest that he can make a bad use of it. For the same reason, we should not eat for fear of indigestion, or drink for fear of a dropsy, should never travel lest we lose our way, or go to sea because we may be shipwrecked. Some hazard must attend all human transactions, and the event of the most simple pursuit cannot be ascertained with certainty.

Imagination has been wearied with efforts to vilify the fœderal constitution proposed by the late Convention; but if nothing more substantial can be urged against it, we may well pronounce it to be most worthy of our acceptance. The irresistable voice of the people seems to be in its favour; and I hope, and I doubt not but that it will be established to the honour and safety of the United States, and to the confusion of their enemies internal and external.

CANDID.

Foreign Intelligence.

LONDON, August 23.

A Circumstance productive of great scandal and uneasiness amongst the religious of the Roman Catholic persuasion, has lately taken place in the south of Ireland, in consequence of the marriage of one of their titular bishops. The person alluded to in his personal right is a nobleman; and in a very advanced period of life, having taken an inclination to matrimony, applied to Rome for a dispensation for that purpose, which was refused him. But as obstacles and scruples are generally obliged on those occasions to give way, the amorous prelate, regardless of papal authority, had the ceremony performed and his marriage solemnized; what is still more extraordinary, he still continues to exercise his religious functions, though opposed and resisted by the inferior clergy.

A gentleman who was at the execution last week, of three criminals who suffered in the county of Kildare, Ireland, for the robbery of Mr. Atkinson, of Keelogue, mentions, that one of them of the name of Byrne, had made a previous settlement with the hangman to put the fore part of the rope in his mouth, instead of surrounding his neck with it. This was actually effected, and the criminal held it tight between his teeth for a considerable time, undiscovered, after he was turned off, the cap being drawn very low down over his face. The stratagem, however, was at length noticed by a gentleman who attended the execution, and information given to the sheriff, when the rope was forced out of the wretched criminal's mouth, and made to embrace his neck; on which he was observed to die with long and apparent agony.

The stratagem used by the above malefactor, to save his life, holding a rope between his teeth, reminds us of a much better contrivance of the noted William Peters, who was hanged no less than seven times, in the counties of Karlow, Wicklow and Kildare, for house breaking and highway robbery. Having made up matters with the goaler and turnkey by a bribe, he fixed an iron grove round his neck, which being lined and stuffed on the inside, gave no pain but such as unavoidably proceeded from the suspension. And as neither the windpipe nor the throat were compressed; after hanging the usual time he was cut down, not only alive but in his perfect senses. The last execution, however, proved fatal, at Naas, where the sub-sheriff, who was not in the secret, discovered the fraud. Peters was taken down, the collar removed, and then hung in earnest, till he was actually dead. This happened in 1729, since which all malefactors have their necks made bare before they are tied up.

Sept. 1. The parliaments of Bourdeaux and of Rouen are not less refractory than that of Paris. One of the resolutions of the privy council was to establish a free liberty of commerce in corn and grain of all sorts. Those two parliaments have decreed an absolute prohibition to the exportation of corn, from any port within their jurisdiction.

The French have no encampment at Givet; and general Rochamboult was spoke with at Paris a few days ago, by a gentleman lately arrived from thence. The general declared that he had received no orders to take any command whatever—all he knew was, that directions had been given for making out a camp on the frontiers.

France very lately wanted a loan of some millions, and there were persons offered, who would have lent the money; but, upon their being required to deposit it, and their asking for funds to be secured upon, none were produced to their satisfaction. Upon this occasion it was that the parliament was called; and they have hitherto refused to register the king's edicts.

The parliament of Paris have brought against Monsieur Calonne—one hundred and thirty articles of impeachment.

AMERICA.

NASSAU, (New-Providence) Oct. 27.

We are sorry to inform our readers of the death of JOHN CRUDEN, Esquire, formerly an eminent merchant in America, and commissioner of sequestrated estates in South-Carolina. The manner of his death is truly distressing, he having been drove by the boom of a sloop, in which he was coming passenger, from Turks-Island, into the sea, from which he was rescued, but soon after expired.

We are indebted to a correspondent who knew Mr. Cruden in all the vicissitudes of fortune, for the following delineation of his character.—"Few men were more succesful in setting out in life, or more unfortunate in its conclusion. Having acquired a handsome fortune in trade, in which he was deeply engaged, on his entrance into public life, he too early lost sight of that care and industry by which it had been acquired, and plunged but too deeply into all the luxury and expence of fashionable life. This causing him to neglect his business as a merchant, great and frequent losses were the consequences, which remained unperceived till it was too late to apply a remedy.—Benevolent and munificent by nature, he met not always with those warm returns of gratitude which he had reason to expect; and placing too implicit a confidence in others, he did not attend sufficiently to his own affairs, till difficulties which he did not expect presented themselves from every quarter, and roused him into action. He did every thing he could to extricate himself from his embarrassments; but it is rather to be feared, the unfavorable termination of the American war precluded him from carrying his intentions into full effect. No man possessed a higher regard for his country, his relatives, or his friends; and he seemed to acquire money, while in the habit of acquiring it, for the sole purpose of diffusing happiness on all around him. His servants and his dependents scarcely felt that he was a master.—To the world in general he was affable, open, manly, and sincere; and there was a polish and an urbanity in his manners that was uncommonly agreeable. Without very shining talents he was not destitute of genius, and without a regular or formed education he was not deficient in knowledge.—Unpressed by adversity, and unassailed by the frowns of fortune, he would have been an ornament to any society in which he lived.—But, perhaps, the most refined imagination and the greatest integrity are not always able to ensure to their possessors happiness and peace, or to preserve to them the perfect enjoyment of themselves and their friends. It is, however, to be hoped, that his unbounded philanthropy has ensured his residence in those happy mansions prepared for the just and the virtuous in another world, whither the storms of adversity do not come."

BOSTON, November 12.

A correspondent observes—Among the objections that have been raised against the proposed fœderal constitution, one is, that existing treaties with foreign powers will be so far affected by it, that advantages may be taken by those powers, in as much as the organization of that confederation with which they contracted will be dissolved.—But it may be observed in answer——that the firm of the union will be the same that it formerly was; and that the alteration will be altogether in favor of the contracting parties,—on the part of the United States, in the powers to fulfil and defend, the stipulations being greatly enlarged; and with respect to foreign states, their security and dependence are encreased in proportion to the efficiency of the national government. In addition to all this, all treaties now formed are ratified, and made the supreme law of the land, by the new constitution.

It may be clearly discerned, from the general complexion of the new constitution, that the convention who framed it, were influenced by the purest republican principles, and appear to have been solicitous to render it as popular as was consistent with the existence of government.

It was reserved for us, in the annals of fate, to open an asylum for the oppressed in every quarter of the globe; but it remains, to complete the noble work, by establishing a government which shall secure the blessings of liberty to ourselves, our posterity and the emigrant, from tyranny, who may fly to these hospitable shores. Heaven, to all its other favors, now presents the golden opportunity—"A greater gift not God himself can give."

A form of government for these United States, less energetic than that now proposed, would, in all probability, be totally deficient in its most essential requisites; for a boundary line between an efficient system and one than would be more popular, though extremely narrow, would be a state of weakness and indicision, or perpetual fluctuation; and to exceed that line by relaxing to a more democratical form, would preclude us from the visible effects of any continental regulations as at present, and expose the union to a dissolution, or what is worse, anarchy and confusion.

MARINE SOCIETY.

Boston, Nov. 6, 1787.

AT a meeting of the Marine Society, held at Boston, on this day, agreeable to their act of incorporation, the following officers were chosen for the year ensuing.

Captain Mungo Mackey, Master.
Captain William Deblois, Deputy-Master.
Captain Nathaniel Patten, Treasurer.
Captain Hezekiah Welch, Clerk.
Captain James Prince,
Captain Simon Elliott, jun. } Wardens.
Captain Edward Davis.

Captain Mungo Mackey, Captain Edward Tyler, and Samuel Dunn, were appointed a committee to receive and digest any communications that might be made them, respecting the variations of the compass, soundings, courses and distances of any head lands, shoals, reefs or sands, on this coast, or any particular observations promotive of nautical knowledge, in order to their being made of public utility.

The society then voted that Tuesday next, the 13th instant, should be appointed for the annual feast, at which the members are requested to attend.

Extract from the Minutes,

NEW-HAVEN, Nov. 14.

Monday last, the inhabitants of this town, qualified by law, to vote at town-meetings, convened at the state-house, and made choice of the honorable Roger Sherman, and Pierpont Edwards, Esquires, delegates, to represent them in the state convention, to be holden at Hartford, on the first Thursday of January next.

Philadelphia, Nov. 27.

A letter from Baltimore, dated the 22d inst. says, "By a vessel just arrived from Nevis, after a short passage, we are advised of a frigate having arrived in 20 days from England with dispatches, which mention an engagement to have happened between the English and French fleets upon the coast of Holland."

A correspondent observes, that the general ferment which has been excited in France among all the orders of the people, has probably inclined that court to withdraw from their engagements in favour of the Dutch patriots; and England, knowing that the Stadtholder, with his Prussian auxiliary, is adequate to the total subduction of that ill-fated party, contentedly remains neutral, enjoying the domestic troubles of her neighbours.

The merchants of Dublin, aided by some powerful noblemen and gentlemen of great landed property, are about establishing a company, to trade to America, the West Indies and the coast of Africa.

Thursday, November 22, 10 o'clock, A. M.

On motion of Mr. Wayne, seconded by Mr. Whitehill, a committee was appointed to report rules and regulations for conducting the business of the convention: the committee consisted of Benjamin Rush, James Wilson, George Gray, Anthony Wayne, and Robert Whitehill.

Adjourned until half after 9 o'clock to-morrow.

Friday, November 23.

The committee appointed yesterday to bring in rules and regulations made report, and the same being read, was, by special order, taken up, read by paragraphs, and agreed to, as follows:

1st. When the President assumes the chair, the members shall take their seats.

2d. At the opening of the convention each day, the minutes of the preceding day shall be read, and are then in the power of the convention to be corrected; after which any business addressed to the chair may be proceeded to.

3d. Every petition, memorial, letter, or other matter of the like kind, read in the convention, shall be deemed as lying on the table for further consideration, unless any special order be moved therein.

4th. A motion made and seconded shall be repeated by the President. A motion shall be reduced to writing, if the President or any two members require it. A motion may be withdrawn by the member making it, before any decision is had on it.

5th. No member speaking shall be interrupted but by a call to order by the President, or by a member through the President.

6th. No member to be referred to in debate by name.

7th. The President himself, or by request, may call to order any member who shall transgress the rules. If a second time, the President may refer to him by name. The convention may then examine and censure the member's conduct, he being allowed to extenuate or justify.

8th. Every member actually attending the convention shall be in his place at the time the convention stands adjourned to, or within half an hour thereof.

9th. The name of him who makes, and the name of him who seconds a motion, shall be entered on the minutes.

10th. No member shall speak more than twice to a question without leave.

11th. Every member of a committee shall attend at the call of his chairman.

12th. The yeas and nays may be called, and entered on the minutes, when any two members require it

On motion of Mr. M'Kean, seconded by Mr. Smilie, ordered that the doors of the convention be left open during the session.

On motion of Mr. Wilson, seconded by Mr. Yates, it was made a rule of the convention to meet at ten o'clock, A. M.

Adjourned to 10 o'clock to-morrow.

The buſineſs of the convention being brought before that honorable body on Saturday laſt, by motion of the honorable Mr. M'Kean, (recited in our laſt) Mr. Wilſon attracted the attention of the houſe by a ſpeech which the celebrated Roman orator would not have bluſhed to own. He began by pointing out the difficulties that the late convention had to encounter; the diverſity of opinion, intereſt and prejudice they had to combat. He ſketched the different forms of ancient and modern republics, and ſhewed how imperfect models they were for our imitation; he proved to demonſtration, that there was not among them one confederated republic; he mentioned theſe difficulties (he ſaid) not to make a parade of the merits of the convention in ſurmounting them, but to ſhew how viſionary—how idle it is to expect that under them a government could be framed unexceptionable in all its parts to each individual of ſo extenſive an empire. He forcibly contraſted the imbecility of our preſent confederation with the energy which muſt reſult from the proffered conſtitution. After defining (with an accuracy which marked his acquaintance with governmental hiſtory) the different kinds of government, and pointing out their reſpective advantages and wants, he concluded a ſpeech which had juſtly won the admiration of his audience, by ſaying, that the late convention had in view, and, he hoped, had in ſome meaſure executed a conſtitution, whoſe energy would pervade the union, and reſtore credit and happineſs to a diſtracted empire.

Yeſterday afternoon, in the Convention of this ſtate, it was moved by Mr. M'Kean, ſeconded by Mr. Chambers, That this Convention do now proceed to conſider the propoſed conſtitution by articles.

After ſome debate it was moved by Mr. R. Whitehill, ſeconded by Mr. Lincoln, that the aforeſaid motion be poſtponed, in order to introduce the following, viz.—That this convention reſolve itſelf into a committee of the whole, for the purpoſe of inveſtigating and conſidering the aforeſaid conſtitution by articles and ſections, and to make report thereon.

A debate of conſiderable length now took place, which turned principally on the expediency of reſolving the Convention into a committee of the whole. In favor of this meaſure it was urged, that it would ſubject the conſtitution to a more free and candid diſcuſſion—that it would allow more time for the members to make up their minds—and that it would be more conſonant to the practice of the Legiſlature of Pennſylvania.——Againſt the motion was urged, that by going into a committee of the whole, no minutes could be taken of the proceedings, and that the people at large would thereby be kept in ignorance of them—that as full liberty was given to each to ſpeak as often as he pleaſed, there would be the ſame time given for deliberation in convention as in the committee—that the practice of the Aſſembly of Pennſylvania was no precedent for the convention—that this was a body without a precedent in the hiſtory of mankind—and that as the whole conſtitution was a ſingle propoſition, and that propoſition alone before the convention, it was unneceſſary to go into a committee, eſpecially as no queſtion could be taken upon any part of the conſtitution, nor any additions made to it, agreeably to the recommendation of the Aſſembly, under which the convention ſat; although objections to every part of it might be made before the queſtion of ratification was propoſed.

The queſtion being at length put, Mr. Whitehill's motion for poſtponement was loſt, the yeas and nays being as follow——

GENERAL ASSEMBLY.

FRIDAY, November 2, 1787, A. M.

The Speaker informed the houſe, there were no papers on the files, and unleſs the members could introduce new buſineſs they might perhaps as well adjourn.

Mr. Lollar obſerved, as there was a great deal of buſineſs in the hands of the committees, it would be right to adjourn, in order to give them time to prepare their reports. Whereupon,

Adjourned until half paſt nine to-morrow, A. M.

SATURDAY, November 3, 1787, A. M.

Mr. Lollar wiſhed the houſe would take ſome means to deſtroy the continental ſtate money, now in the treaſury—if this was done, he thought it would be a ſatisfaction to the public, who did not approve of money lying there, tho' they had no apprehenſion of its being reiſſued, for which purpoſe, he would ſubmit the following:

Reſolved, that a committee be appointed, to conſider of and report ſome proper mode, to be purſued by this houſe, in order to effect the ſinking and deſtroying ſuch ſum or ſums of the laſt emiſſion of continental money, commonly called ſtate money, as at this time or hereafter may be found in the treaſury of this ſtate: whereupon,

Ordered, that Meſſrs. Kennedy, M'Lene and Lollar, be a committee for the purpoſes mentioned in the reſolution.

On motion, and by ſpecial order, the petition of Margaret Davies was read a ſecond time;

Ordered, that it be referred to a committee.

The Speaker named Mr. Moore, Mr. Evans and Mr. Thomas, when it was agreed to add two more; whereupon, Mr. Evans nominated Mr. Lowry and Mr. Clingan.

Mr. Lowry objected ſerving on the committee, as he was againſt making any ſuch allowance; and he aſked, if it was uſual to put thoſe on committees, who were againſt the meaſure.

Mr. Evans had nominated the gentleman for the very reaſon he had juſt mentioned—And the houſe determined, thoſe gentlemen ſhould be added to the committee.

Mr. M'Lene thought it improper to have gentlemen on committees who are oppoſed to its object, and therefore moved, to reconſider the laſt vote, but he was not ſeconded.

The committee upon the ſtate of affairs in the county of Luzerne further report, that a committee be appointed to bring in a bill to oblige the free male inhabitants of the ſaid county to give freſh aſſurances of their allegiance to this ſtate, and make them ſubſcribe a declaration in which they ſhall acknowledge the right of this ſtate, to extend its juriſdiction over the county of Luzerne; and renouncing all claim to lands within the ſaid county, under Connecticut or the Suſquehanna company, excepting what is intended to be confirmed to the Connecticut claimants, by the law for that purpoſe enacted; and in which alſo they ſhall engage to aid the officers of the county, in the full execution of the laws.

The foregoing report was read, and ordered to lie on the table.

It was moved to adjourn until Wedneſday afternoon, in order to let the citizens of Philadelphia have the uſe of the State-houſe, for holding the election for delegates to convention on Tueſday—This motion Mr. M'Lene would oppoſe by barely giving it his negative, as he could not conſent to loſe ſo much time.

Mr G. Clymer inſiſted there would be no loſs of time, for at preſent there was no buſineſs before the houſe, and the interval might be uſefully employed in committees preparing the buſineſs referred to them.

Whereupon the houſe adjourned till Wedneſday, P. M.

THURSDAY, November 8, 1787, A. M.

The following petition was preſented; and on motion, and by ſpecial order, the ſame was read a ſecond time, and referred to Meſſrs. Wynkoop, M'Lene and Rittenhouſe.

To the Honorable the Repreſentatives of the Freemen of Pennſylvania in General Aſſembly met.

The petition of the American Philoſophical Society, held at Philadelphia, for promoting uſeful knowledge,

Humbly Sheweth,

THAT the extenſive field of natural production in this country, as yet little explored, affords much ground to hope, that by examining and analyzing the various productions of this extenſive continent, many important diſcoveries may be made, for bringing into uſe, as well for home conſumption as for exportation, many valuable materials, which we have hitherto been accuſtomed to import from other countries.

That the labors and reſearches of your petitioners, are peculiarly adapted to promote theſe great and valuable ends; but having, as a Society, no permanent funds for purchaſing the neceſſary apparatus for experiments, and diſtributing rewards and premiums for uſeful diſcoveries, your petitioners confidently hope they ſhall receive the patronage and aſſiſtance of the legiſlature of Pennſylvania, by partaking in common with divers ſeminaries of learning, of the waſte lands of the ſtate, ſet apart as donations to ſuch uſeful inſtitutions.

Your petitioners therefore pray, that the legiſlature will be pleaſed to grant to the American Philoſophical Society, ſuch portions of the ſaid lands, as to them in their wiſdom ſhall ſeem meet.

John Ewing, V. P.
William White, V. P.
David Rittenhouſe, V. P.
Samuel Vaughan.

Philadelphia, 2d Nov. 1787.

Mr. Hubley preſented a petition from the truſtees of Franklin college, at Lancaſter, praying the houſe to grant the inſtitution two lots, and the ſtore houſe erected thereon in the borough of Lancaſter. On motion and by ſpecial order, the ſame was read a ſecond time, and referred to Meſſrs. Will, Hubley and Richards.

Mr. Lollar preſented a petition from a number of the invalid corps ſtationed in this city, praying the houſe to make up the depreciation of their preſent pay, which they are unable any longer to ſuſtain, or grant them ſuch other relief as their wiſdom may direct.

On motion and by ſpecial order, it was read a ſecond time, and referred to the grand committee on claims.

A THOUGHT on WAKING.

SLEEP by night and Cares by day,
Bear my fleeting life away.
Lo! in yonder eaſtern ſkies
Sol appears, and bids me riſe:
Tells me, "Life is on the wing,
"And has no returning ſpring;
"Death comes on with ſteady pace,
"And Life's the only day of grace."
Shining preacher! happy morning!
Let me take th' important warning!
Rouſe then all my active pow'rs,
Well improve the coming hours;
Let no trifles kill the day,
(Trifles oft our hearts betray.)
Virtue, Science, Knowledge, Truth,
Guide th' inquiries of my youth:
Wiſdom, and Experience ſage,
Then ſhall ſooth the cares of age:
Thoſe with time ſhall never die,
Thoſe will lead to joys on high,
Thoſe the path of life diſplay,
Shining with celeſtial day;
Bliſsful path! with ſafety trod,
And it leads the ſoul to God.

Examples of Roman Luxury.

PVEDIUS POLLIO, originally a ſlave, afterwards emancipated, and by dint of money made a Roman Knight, carried luxury to its greateſt height. He kept lampreys in a pond, where he fed them with human fleſh; and the ordinary puniſhment inflicted on his ſlaves, even for trivial faults, was to have them thrown, hands and feet tied together, into that pond, to feed thoſe voracious animals. Yet this barbarous wretch was numbered among the friends of Auguſtus Cæſar.

One day that this Emperor dined at his houſe, a ſlave happened to break a chryſtal bowl, and was immediately condemned to be thrown to the lampreys. The poor fellow threw himſelf at Auguſtus's feet, imploring not life, but a leſs ſhocking death. Auguſtus interceded for him; but ſuch was Vedius's inſolence, that he refuſed the Prince's requeſt. Auguſtus, thereupon, ordered all the vaſes that were upon the ſideboard to be brought, and he himſelf broke every one of them directly. The power of life and death was ſtill in the maſter under Auguſtus.

L. Craſſus, the celebrated orator, confeſſed that a great part of his ſilver plate ſtood him in ſix thouſand ſeſterces (48l. 15s.) the pound, becauſe of the workmanſhip. He had two ſilver goblets engraved by Mentor, which he was aſhamed to uſe, they having coſt 812l. 10s.

The Roman connoiſſeurs in eating uſed to declare, that it was no dinner, if, when you was feeding moſt to your taſte, the diſh was not ſuddenly taken away, and another ſtill better ſet down in its place. This was a proof of elegance among thoſe who ſubſtituted expence and dainties inſtead of pleaſantry—who ſay a man of a fine palate eats not the whole of any bird but a Beccafico—that, if any more than the rumps of either birds or poultry be ſerved up, it is a mean ſordid entertainment; and that thoſe who eat the fore parts of fowls of any kind, have no taſte.

Apicius, a Roman of no mean genius, and born to an immenſe fortune, openly profeſſed the kitchen ſcience, and made good eating the buſineſs of his life. He applied himſelf with as much aſſiduity to make experiments upon ſauces, try mixtures, and examine reliſhes, as ever a chymiſt did to fix mercury, find out the philoſopher's ſtone, or produce a vivifying ointment. All kinds of birds, beaſts and fiſhes were brought to him from foreign parts, and he inveſtigated their taſtes with different ſauces and different dreſſings. When he declared his opinion of a diſh, it was received as deciſive, and ſacredly followed by all the polite eaters of the Auguſtan age. Auguſtus's favourite Fabius condeſcended to dine with Apicius after he had been conſul; a vaſe of chryſtal, then very rare, happened to fall out of his hand, when he was viewing it, and was broke. The thoughts of the high price it bore kept him ſilent and anxious, in ſpite of all the eaſe and gaiety that Apicius could put on. When at laſt, as if in a paſſion, What! Fabius, ſaid he, will you ſpoil our mirth, becauſe you have done, againſt your will, what many of my ſlaves, bought with my money, do through mere heedleſſneſs?—clear up, and take your part in our joy, which is of more value than an hundred vaſes.

Old Æſop, the player, dreſſed up a diſh of ſinging birds which ſtood him in 4143l. 10s. He had a ſon who did not degenerate. He was left with a great eſtate, and, meaning to live well, he would try what was the flavour of a pearl diſſolved in vinegar: Finding it very delicious, he gave an entertainment where every gueſt had a pearl given him, as the fineſt draught he could regale them with.

Of the beſt Quality—To be Sold by

John Murduck,

At his Perfume Shop, at the Sign of the Roſe, in Walnut, between Second and Third ſtreets.

One great advantage attending the Concave Razors is, that they never require grinding, by which means their poliſh and beauty are preſerved; a few ſtrokes upon the hone gives them an edge, and by careful ſtropping they may be kept in order a long time.

N. B. Said Murduck knowing how valuable good Razors are, intends to keep none but the very beſt to diſpoſe of. Orders from Gentlemen, however diſtant, will be attended to with as much care as though they had the immediate choice in his ſhop.

He has Likewiſe—The very beſt

LANDS FOR SALE

IN MARYLAND.

THE ſubſcriber has for ſale, all that TRACT of LAND called Beall's Plantation and Bateman's Field (being part of Snowden's Reputation Supported) containing from a late ſurvey 676 and a half acres, ſituate on the head of South river, Anne Arrundel county, about 3 miles from navigable water, 12 from the city of Annapolis, 28 from Baltimore town, 25 from George town, and about 7 from the Inſpection Houſes of Indian Landing and Queen Anne, is well adapted for corn, wheat, and particularly tobacco.

This Plantation has not been tenanted for 3 years is a moſt pleaſing and deſirable ſituation, and capable of great improvement at a ſmall expence; there are 259 acres of timber land, a greater part of which is very valuable. The ſubſcriber would prefer diſpoſing of the whole in one lot; but has no objection to making ſeveral of it: the timber land is conveniently ſituated for making ſuch diviſions in equal proportions, & there are many pleaſant ſituations for erecting different buildings; it is alſo well watered—A very good mill ſtream runs through it, and there is ſome meadow ground, and much more may be very readily made.

The improvements upon it are, a good dwelling houſe with three large rooms on each floor, kitchen, quarter, corn houſe, ſtables, tobacco houſe, and two very fine apple orchards, one of which contains 220 trees, together with a number of other valuable fruit trees.

A plan of this eſtate may be ſeen at Mr. Vachel Stevens, ſurveyor, Annapolis, who will ſhew the premiſes; alſo at Meſſ. William Patterſon & Brother's, Baltimore, and further information had. For price, terms, &c. apply to JOHN WADDINGTON.

This WORK will be printed in a handsome Octavo Volume, on good Paper, with a new & elegant scabbarded Type, and shall contain about two hundred and fifty Pages. The Volume will be neatly bound and lettered, and delivered to the Subscribers at the very low Price of 7/6, which is just half the cost of the London Edition—To Non-subscribers 9/. No Money to be received until the Book is delivered, which will be some time in January next.

THIS WORK, which has in Europe established the fame of the Author, as a Philosopher and a Man of Letters, will undoubtedly meet with the encouragement due to its merit from the Citizens of the American States, in whose service those talents have so often been displayed.

Though entitled Notes on the State of Virginia, his observations are not confined to that state alone, but often refer to different parts of the United States, particularly those situated on the Western Waters; and under this unassuming title the philosophical reader will find ample food for his curiosity, in a more perfect Natural History of Virginia, and its neighbourhood, than has ever yet appeared.

In a word, all America knows Mr. Jefferson; and we may venture to assure the Public, that the wisdom of his political, and the depth of his natural and philosophical researches, could be no where more perfectly exemplified than in these Notes on Virginia.

It is therefore hoped that the Encouragers of American Productions of this nature, will be speedy in giving in their names to those entrusted with subscription papers, which will be gratefully acknowledged by their humble servants,

From the Virginia Independent Chronicle.

DEAR COUNTRYMEN,

THE critical instant which is to determine our existence as a nation, or our annihilation, draws near; this is the moment of crisis which is to verify, or contradict the European prediction, that the American states will be crushed under the weight of their independence, by the troubles and divisions which shall arise amongst them.

Far from seeing our agriculture improve, our commerce flourish, our happiness and our inward tranquility increase, our reputation and our credit enlarge and extend itself abroad, (as we had reason to flatter ourselves) we have constantly seen the contrary since the epoch of our independence; our evils have accumulated and are become of a very alarming nature; our enemies abroad, and in our very bosom exult in putting our present situation in parallel with what it was before the revolution, and deceiving us on the causes, will not fail to attribute the source of our misfortunes to our scission with Great Britain.

Let us examine, my dear Virginians, how it is possible, that being free by the rights of independence, from the constraints, fetters, and prohibitions, which the metropolis used to impose on our agriculture, our industry and our commerce—that being no more slavishly subjected to favour the British manufactures, trades and marine—that being no longer under the monopoly of that nation which used to direct our luxuries, our tastes and our consumptions as it suited her, which used to encourage, or in a manner proscribe our culture according to her advantage, and which was the sole carrier of our imports and exports; how is it possible, I say, that having in our power to preserve within ourselves the riches that we have loaded her with, we are really more unhappy, with so many means to promote our happiness: The enigma is very easy to unfold; it is because we have not done a single thing that we ought to have done; it is because we have been satisfied with the bare name and appearance of liberty, and have continued to remain really, in the chains of British slavery. We have religiously preserved the fancies, prejudices and customs, which they had stamped on our minds for the produce of their manufactures. From thence it comes that their merchants have an advantage on those of all other nations who daily grow weary and remove.

We still consume profusely their tea, china, East India goods, beer, rum, &c. which carry away our specie, instead of paying all attention, and using ourselves to our beer, cider, fruit and grain brandies, which we can manufacture among us. We draw from England and Ireland candles, butter, cheese, salt beef, potatoes, and lastly, all the commodities which our soil can produce so abundantly, we even use the coals which they ballast their vessels with, and which are so plenty among us.

While this nation as much jealous as she is wise in her principles of commerce, not satisfied with her famous act of navigation, passed another act in July 1783, excluding American vessels from any trade with her islands, either for our, or her own commodities, we have shewn in our assembly of the same year, only an impotent zeal and patriotism, by an act in retaliation, which for want of being unanimously promulged by the other twelve states, turned to our disadvantage. Therefore we have ever since seen our ports filled with English vessels, which are not only the carriers of their own commodities, but also of our produce, and thus take away our specie by freights and seamens wages, besides the inconveniency of seeing (in case of war) all our property on sea in the power and at the mercy of our enemy. By means of feigned titles of American property, and under our colours, they are yet allowed in our ports, the same privileges as our subjects while by real titles they enjoy in their own the British prerogatives.

France has offered us some advantages in her free ports. She allows us a trade with her islands limited to certain articles. What have we done, and what can we do to requite it, and obtain more prerogatives? And what can we do to guard against the prohibitions of other nations? As long as we shall only be able to pass partial resolutions, crossed, and rendered useless by the other legislative powers.

It is then very obvious that we have enjoyed none of the great advantages which independence promised us, and we see ourselves deprived of the assistance, advances and credit, which the metropolis, used to sell us so dear, and which all nations would be so eager to offer us were they to find a part only of the immense profits which Great Britain used to draw from it, and could they find in America, the punctuality and security, which alone gain credit and support confidence. We have the best mortgage to offer, which is immense and fruitful lands. For this axiom is certain, nothing is lent those that have nothing, and credit is offered at the lowest rate, to those that offer the best securities —— Therefore as long as the law will subsist in Virginia that the creditor cannot seize, lay attachment and sell the land of his debtor, at the epoch the debt fall due, it is as we had nothing, and as long as it will be by the tediousness of the courts of justice almost impossible to force the debtor, we shall not find money lenders, none but usurers will offer, that will ruin us. Specie of course will turn its course towards other states that will have better and more political laws.

America (and principally Virginia) is of necessity a borrower. The extent of her lands which demand great advances to grub them up, her commerce just rising, of which the first funds ought to be laid, and her manufactures of chief wants which ought to be established, require assistance and credit. When we were under the tuition of Great Britain, she presided over our laws, & in a manner digested them. We could pass no act tending to hurt or annihilate the rights and interests of British creditors; consequently they did not fear to advance considerable sums, on which they drew an annual interest higher than the rate in England, besides the profits arising from a trade in which the balance was always in their favour, and which has brought us five millions of pounds sterling in their debt.—Those services and advances, though so dearly bought, were, however, indispensible, and augmented in a greater proportion the mass of the produce of population, and of our territorial riches. By running in debt with the mother country, America increased really in power. We may from thence judge how much more rapid and prodigious her progress would be, was she, (as she might) by her union and unanimity, to purchase at this moment her assistance cheaper, and in a way less burdensome for her. It would be then only she would enjoy the advantages of her liberty and of her independence.

We have seen how much our predeliction, prejudices and customs, have favoured the skill and endeavours of the British to keep us under their subjection; let us now examine what use we made of our liberty as sovereign states. Far from having a fixed and combined plan of commerce for the thirteen states, analogous to that of the nations, with whom we are or wish to be connected, and conforming our regulations to their exemptions, privileges and prohibitions, so as to maintain an equal balance of the advantages which they offer us, and keep for themselves our several legislative powers, have passed acts to cross and oppose one another reciprocally! Being disunited and rivals, the European nations, and principally Great Britain, have preserved all their advantages, and still keep us under the slavery of their prohibitive laws.

At the time that Great Britain withdrew her assistance and her credit, and demanded reimbursements, some states drove away the lenders and destroyed the general confidence, by opposing the uniform tax, which Congress wanted to establish, to pay the arrears of the money borrowed during the war, and for the extinction of capitals since that time, the European nations have seen nothing in us but divided states, legislative powers jealous, contradictory and faithless. Even the owners of large capitals among us, have sent their pecuniary fortunes to foreign countries; the scarcity of specie is become extraordinary by these causes united together; the distrust is become general, and from thence all our evils have originated. The interest on money has risen to an enormous rate; all transactions upon trust have been ruinous for the person who asked for credit; what would have been looked upon as usury and punishable, is become legal and authorized by the circumstances. Our public funds have fallen into contempt; our most sacred engagements lose the 4-5ths of their value, and as a state of constraint and distress ends by the corruption of the principles of honour and delicacy among nations, as well as among individuals. Some legislative powers have passed acts contrary to the treaty of peace and to the general fœderation; others have emitted paper money, which the creditors were forced to receive, notwithstanding its depreciation. The course of justice has been stopped by riotous mobs, & even in this state where the citizen has acquired the character of being mild, generous and honest, the public jails have been broke open; the office of titles and records has been burned, and in all the public papers, and even in the house, the question whether an instalment of debts, paper money, or a deduction of the 4 5ths of public debts shall be established, is seriously debated, and they seem to hesitate only on the choice of those means.—The planter accuses the merchant of being the cause of his distress; the latter complains of the former; the state is in confusion, and is threatened with a total ruin.

In perceiving, dear countrymen, the causes of our distresses, and seeing clearly that we have turned against ourselves, the immense advantages which our independence should have procured us, you also feel at the same time the inefficaciousness of the remedies, which these writers propose you in the public papers. Instead of tracing back to the origin of our evils, and from reinstating the confidence and credit, which alone can revive our agriculture, our marine, our commerce, and our finances, they would end by their entire ruin, were we to follow their advices of infidelity and dishonesty, by breaking our engagements. They are like these ignorant physicians, who without knowing and seeking into the nature of the disease, improperly apply a violent remedy which occasions an immediate death. Our true physicians are those whom we have assembled in Convention, and not those obscure writers who in great part are our enemies. That assembly of wise and learned men, presided by a hero, has duly examined the source of our evils proceeding from a want of union, strength, regularity and unanimity in the government, which excluded credit, help, confidence and reputation, as well within as without the states. She has seen our agriculture suffer for want of advances, our commerce and our marine sinking before it has taken a rise, as much by our jealousies between states, as by the struggle against the nations more experienced and more constant in their principles of trade. Finally, she presents us her work, the result of her patriotic labours, not as a perfect thing, which it is only in the power of the divinity to accomplish, but as what suits best the present critical and pressing circumstance.

We must expect that this new constitution will meet with contradictions, and in the number, with some antagonists, who under the veil of the love of the public good, and liberty, will endeavor to raise doubts and fears, either to hinder or delay its execution. It lays in our power to distinguish a few, and to discover their secret motives. Some addicted either by inclination, or by interest to British connections, and to the former dependence, will remove as much as possible whatever is contrary to it; others will apprehend to see the functions and the perquisites of their offices diminished; others will fear that good order and regulations once established, will lead to the payment of public and private debts; others will be humbled to see that the state assemblies, shall be confined to interior regulations, when Congress will be invested with the great objects of general administration; others will lament that it will be no more in their power to pass acts contradictory to those of the fœderation, and prohibitive laws to cross the interests and commerce of the other neighbouring states; others will raise our fears and jealousy on the advantages that some states will find, and on the too great powers granted to Congress, as if they were not all to draw their natural advantages from this association, and as if we had reason to apprehend reunited and balanced powers, which we give and take at our will and pleasure; and lastly, some few others wil find it difficult to reconcile themselves to this simple and natural idea, of thirteen provinces making but one state, whose glory and prosperity will necessarily effect that of the parts which composes it intimately, and which was the original and sublime plan of the fœderation, which we have but very imperfectly executed.

I therefore invite you, my dear countrymen, to make use of your natural knowledge, and of the lessons of the time past, and to guard against such writers. Read, and reflect on the new constitution; it secures us inviolably our rights and prerogatives as a republican nation, preciously preserving the nature of a government purely democratical. By the nomination of our representatives, without distinction or inheritance, it will procure us the order, strength and unanimity indispensible for a nation. Let us benefit of the consideration we enjoy amongst the other confederate states, and of the confidence they repose in our wisdom, and let us decide by our example those that may hesitate to adopt.

We may flatter ourselves that with labour and œconomy, it will render us in a short space of time, a happy, powerful and recommendable people.

A TRUE FRIEND.

LONDON, Sept. 1.

Extract of a letter from Madras, to a gentleman in Edinburgh, dated Feb. 26, 1787.

"SIR Archibald Campbell, our governor, has just concluded a permanent treaty, consisting of nineteen articles, with the nabob of Arcot, by which are finally adjusted and arranged his quota of contribution towards the annual public expence of the peace establishment of the Carnatic. Till now his share was fixed at 100,000l. sterling, per annum; but our governor, with much labour and address, has got his highness to pay in future, 360,000l. per annum, to the company's revenues here. In this treaty a line is also drawn and ascertained, that establishes the annual payments to the nabob's creditors, and which will clear off the whole of his debts, (about 1,800,000l.) in about eleven years. His revenue is about 2,000,000l. sterling, one of the greatest in Asia, were his debts paid.

"This wise adjustment of the nabob's debts, and his being placed on a solid footing, in his own management and collection of the rents and revenues of his own country, cuts up by the roots every prospect in future of designing European peculators."

A very particular circumstance lately occurred which has occasioned much conversation at Windsor.—His majesty, after parading the terrace with the duke of York, rested his arm on the sun dial, which is near the end of the walk; the duke did the same, and continued in conversation with some gentlemen, with whom they had, for some time before, been walking.—During this parley, a centinel upon duty there, walked up to the king, and "desired his majesty to remove from the dial, as it was under his particular charge."—His majesty removed accordingly; observing at the same time, that the man's rigid adherence to his orders was highly commendable;—and a few hours after, he was graciously pleased to recommend him to the colonel of the regiment, as an object worthy of promotion, and one who ought to be provided for in as eligible a manner as the service would admit.

Sept. 8.

Extract of a letter from Versailles, Sept. 3.

"I have to congratulate your countrymen on the event of the 30th of last month; the East-India Convention was then signed here, by the plenipotentiaries of the courts of Versailles and Great-Britain.

"The contract is of the most satisfactory nature, expresly stipulating the conduct of both nations by it, and by which they are mutually pledged, that no farther armament shall be made in either country. That they shall accede to a mediation in the Dutch disputes conjointly.

"This is the first step of the new French ministry, and is the only circumstance that could have averted immediate hostilities.

"These are said to be the principles of the convention, as well as the adjustment of all the East-India disputes. Every patriotic Frenchman rejoices in the idea, as nothing could be more acceptable to the people in this country than a continuation of peace. They begin to feel the sweets of commerce and cherish them as the seeds of liberty; and if we may judge from the conduct of the grand monarque, nothing can be dearer to his heart than a good understanding with Great Britain.

"His conduct in the Dutch business has been represented in your newspapers as equivocal; but the event has proved, that he was actuated only by prudence, like your own. Representations were made, and probably with justice and truth, that his minister at the Hague, the marquis de Verac, had gone great lengths, both directly and indirectly, in giving countenance to the patriots in Holland. No sooner was the king convinced of his imprudence, than he recalled him, and sent count de St. Priest in his stead, whose moderation and pacific dispositions are more calculated to reconcile than embroil.

"The appointment of the archbishop of Thoulouse to be his first minister, will have also a corresponding effect, and the ratification of the present convention is in conformity with his other assurances and doctrines of peace. These circumstances being now known in Holland, it is probable, that hostilities will immediately cease, should they have commenced; or that the insurgents must consequently be left to shift for themselves."

Extract of a letter from Utrecht, Sept. 3.

"It continues to be publicly asserted, and particularly at the Hague, that the system of the court of France is changed; and that, in the present state of his kingdom, it is not consistent with the interest of his Most Christian Majesty to engage in a war. It is thought at Versailles, that it will be more prudent, by some honorable means, to appease the displeasure of the king of Prussia, with regard to the interruption of the journey of the princess of Orange, than to adopt such violent measures as might risk setting all Europe in a flame."

Sept. 13. In Europe there is a kind of balance between the southern and northern nations. The first have every convenience of life, and few of its wants; the eastern have many wants, and are limited in their conveniences. To one nature has given much, and demands but little; to the other she has given but little, and demands a great deal. The equilibrium is maintained by the laziness of the southern nations, and by the industry and activity which she has given to those in the north. The latter are obliged to undergo labor, without which they would want almost every thing. This has naturalized slavery to the people of the south, as they can easily dispense with liberty; but the people of the north have need of liberty, for this can best procure them the means of satisfying all those wants which they have received from nature. The people of the north then are in a forced state, if they are not free: almost all the people of the south are in some measure in a state of violence if they are not slaves.

We hear from Lisbon by a ship arrived in the river, that they had an account from Madeira, that two Algerine gallies, which had been cruizing off there, had taken two American vessels, which they sent off to Algiers, were at length taken by two Portuguese men of war; that as soon as some repairs were done to them, they were to be sent to Lisbon with the crews, as the merchants there did not like to keep them for slaves.

Extract of a letter from an officer of the navy, to his friend in Edinburgh, dated Portsmouth, Aug. 31.

"I expected to have been with you by this time on leave of absence, but orders are arrived from the admiralty, for all the officers to remain with their ships."

Sept. 17. Englishmen, however they may be disposed to acts of humanity, are not displeased to hear of wars and rumours of wars—of sieges and battles—a long list of killed and wounded, gives a relish to their breakfast—so that we have too much reason to expect, that the Quidnuncs will soon have no reason to exclaim against the dulness of the news-papers.

A very considerable reinforcement of French troops is already arrived at Givet, and the whole army there under—marching orders.

If the Dutch and Brabanters do severally give way, and the porte yield up all its pretensions on Russia, war must soon be kindled in Europe, of which the flames will spread from the utmost extremity of the Caspian sea to the English channel. The greatest part of the northern hemisphere will be involved, and a scene of destruction exhibited, beyond any thing that has been known in the annals of mankind.

Sept. 22.

Extract of a Letter from Paris, Sept. 12.

"All tumults here have ceased:—Indeed it could not be otherwise:—twelve thousand men in arms, which are in Paris and its neighbourhood, are sufficient forever to preserve order and tranquility in this city. The king published an edict this morning, in which he has declared the resolutions taken by the parliament of Paris, by refusing to register the stamp and land-tax, null and illegal:—Notwithstanding which, it is determined, that neither tax shall take place, and that the parliament will, in a few days, be recalled to Paris."

Philadelphia, Nov. 28.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY.

THURSDAY, November 1, 1787.

Colonel Piper called for the reading of the return of representatives for the county of Bedford, observing that there was an unusual circumstance attended the election of the two gentlemen, and which the law he believed did not provide for. It appears that Mr. Cable and Mr. Saylor have each the same number of votes, and neither of the gentlemen attending, made him conceive a new election necessary, in order to have the county properly represented. The return being read,

Colonel Lowrey informed the house, he had seen the member of council, from that county, who had just arrived in town, and learnt from him, that one of the gentlemen alluded to, by the member from Bedford, was on his way down, and expected in town in a day or two, and he had such documents with him, as was supposed would enable the house to decide on the sitting member, he therefore was of opinion, it would be better to let the matter rest until then, rather than put the county to the expence and trouble of holding a new election, unnecessarily.

Colonel Piper assured the house that this was a circumstance he was totally unacquainted with, and he would chearfully give up the idea of a new election.

Whereupon the business was postponed for the present.

Mr. Moore presented a petition from Henry Drink and William Vangorder, setting forth their being called upon by the government of Pennsylvania, to oppose the lawless banditti at Wyoming, styling themselves Connecticut claimants, that when on this service, July the 20th, 1784, they were fired upon, and desperately wounded, under which misfortune they long suffered and languished, and in consequence are rendered unable to obtain their subsistence by hard labor, and praying relief from this house.

On motion and by special order, the same was read a second time, and referred to the grand committee of claims.

On motion of Mr. Lowrey, the bill entitled 'an act to incorporate the Presbyterian church of Middle Octorara, Bart township, in the county of Lancaster,' was read a second time, and considered by paragraphs.

On the clause, which directs, that the assent of the major part of the corporation should enable the officers to sell or dispose of the property vested in them;

Mr. M'Lene disliked, in business of such consequence, to the corporation, to put it in the power of so small a majority to govern, he wished to amend the charter, by inserting the words 'two third parts' in lieu of major part.

The Speaker observed this clause was worded in the same manner as in the other numerous charters, which the legislature of the state had at various times conferred on religious societies.

Mr. Lollar. If that is the case, sir, I see no reason for an alteration, especially if the congregation who sent the bill, agree to have it in the manner it stands.

Mr. M'Lene's motion was not seconded, and the bill without further debate was gone thro'.

Ordered, that it be transcribed, and in the mean time printed for public consideration.

Mr. Mitchell (a member from York county) presented a petition from a number of the inhabitants of that county, which he had taken from the files of the last house, in order to introduce the subject to the attention of the present.

The petition was read, stating certain grievances in the present mode of collecting debts by legal process, and praying the revival of an act passed in the year 1700, which empowered the justices of the county courts to appoint appraisers of goods taken in executions at whose appraisement the creditor was obliged to receive them; also praying that constables may be made elective by the qualified freeholders of the respective townships, and empowered to serve process equally with the sheriff's officers, at the present rates allowed to constables.

Ordered to lie on the table.

THURSDAY, November 8, 1787, A. M.

Mr. Peters presented the following report:

The committee, to whom was referred the memorial of Richard Wells and John Clifford, late owners of the ship Anna, forfeited to the state, as set forth in the memorial, beg leave to report,

That the case of the said owners appears singularly hard, as the offence in consequence whereof the forfeiture accrued, was committed, as appears by the certificate of the court, before who the trial was had, without their participation or knowledge.

That although it may be politically expedient, to consider owners generally responsible in point of property, for the conduct of those they employ in their vessels, yet in this case, we conceive an exception ought to be made, as the ship was beyond the sea, when the law, by the breach whereof she became forfeited, was passed, and of course they could have no notice of it, so as to take cautionary measures for securing themselves against the misconduct of their officers and mariners, entrusted with the vessel.

That all undue exercises of severity in government are impolitic, as they defeat the purposes intended by them; and it is well known that smuggling in other countries, has frequently encreased, in proportion to the severity of the trade-laws. And in England, where the laws are extremely rigorous, powers of mitigation are lodged in a board of commissioners, who make the necessary discriminations on the subject.

That we do not perceive any power of restoring the forfeiture in the whole or in part, exists in any executive branch of government in Pennsylvania; and though fully sensible of the propriety of discouraging breaches of our trade-laws, yet we are convinced that discriminations will be found proper on many occasions. The supreme executive council, have a power by the 20th section of the frame of government, to remit fines and grant pardons, in all cases but those of impeachments, yet it does not give them the right of interfering in cases of forfeiture.

A fine being a pecuniary communication for a corporal punishment, and a forfeiture, a resumption of property lost to the individual, by breaches of the municipal laws of society; and which has, in consequence of such breaches, become fores fact, or feited, i. e. passed from the owners to the community. In the former case council have a right to remit as they have to pardon the corporal punishment; but the right of re-vesting property forfeited, remains with the people, being a branch of sovereignty not delegated to the supreme executive. Former legislatures have been sensible of this, and acted accordingly, as the house may perceive by referring to the cases of Reynold Kean, 1 vol. of laws. 159—224; Henry Hugh Ferguson, 446; the estate of N. Vernon, 225; John Spring, vol. 2, chap. 43. And in the case of the tumult in Walnut-street, Philadelphia, the house have interfered in pardoning, where fines might have been imposed; because, as is recited with much justice and propriety in the bill on that subject, vol. 1, chap. 258—"the rigorous prosecution of justice in all cases is not expedient."

In the case referred to us, we therefore beg leave to recommend to the house, the following resolution:

Resolved, That a committee be appointed to draft and report a bill for the relinquishment of the share of the forfeiture, passed to the state, by the condemnation of the ship Anna, to Richard Wells and John Clifford, late owners of the said ship.

And that there may be a permanent power in the executive, competent to consider of and redress cases of the like nature, superceding the necessity of farther interference of the legislature, we beg leave further to report, that it be

Resolved, That a committee be appointed to draught and report a bill, vesting in the supreme executive council a power to mitigate or restore, if they deem proper, any forfeiture or forfeitures, which may hereafter accrue to the state, in consequence of offences against the laws for the regulation of trade.

Ordered to lie on the table.

Extract of a letter from Edinburgh, dated June 1.

"Wednesday last was executed at Dumfries, William Ritchie, for the murder of Mary Higgens, a girl of 29 years of age, who was seven months gone with child by him. His body was afterwards given to the surgeons to be anatomized. Ritchie was about 29 years of age, was born within three miles of Krenbridge, in the county of Galloway, and was bred a labourer. At the time he committed this barbarous action, he served with a farmer near Dumfries. Mary Higgens, a poor insane girl, served in the same family; and Ritchie taking the advantage of her weakness, she became pregnant, which she endeavoured to conceal till it could no longer be hid. In order to get quit of the child, he in the month of September last first conceived the design of taking away her life. Accordingly one day, having gone into the field, being harvest time, with one of his fellow servants, and knowing the poor girl was alone in the house, he gave his comrade his hook to hold, pretending he had forgot something in the house; and having gone in, found the girl scraping potatoes, and only a child of between five and six years of age in the house with her. He immediately went forward to the poor girl, as if to salute her, and pulling back her head, cut her throat from ear to ear, then jumped out of a window, and ran back to the corn field. His master observing some blood on his hands, said to him, What makes you stay so long behind the rest? I am afraid you have been about something that does not altogether please me. To this Ritchie made no reply. In a short time after word was brought to the field, that Mary Higgens was murdered. The master examined the servants, who all strenuously asserted they knew nothing of the matter. But when they came to Ritchie, he at first hung his head, and said nothing; but afterwards, with a bold face, denied the fact. The child, however, told, that the man who murdered her aunt went out at the back window into the garden. The master upon this called all his servants together, to see whose foot was nearest the stamp or impression that was on the outside of the window. Ritchie was the last that was examined, and being conscious that he was the guilty person, he trembled for fear, and said to his master, that he thought his foot answered the nearest. His master then desired him, if he was guilty, to flee for his life; but, if innocent, to stand and clear himself, (probably with a view to try what Ritchie would do.) He however declined running away, and said he would stay and clear himself. But what was his surprise, when, upon the corpse being lifted, the child cried out, This is the man that cut my aunt's throat! He was immediately struck with horror, betrayed his guilt, and was taken into custody. He died penitent."

The Matrimonial Creed.

WHosoever will be married, before all things it is necessary that he hold the conjugal faith; and the conjugal faith is this that there were two rational beings created both equal, and yet one superior to the other, and the inferior shall bear rule over the superior; which faith, except every one do keep whole and undefiled, without doubt he shall be scolded at everlastingly.

The man is superior to the woman, and the woman is inferior to the man, yet both are equal, and the woman shall govern the man.

The woman is commanded to obey the man, and the man ought to obey the woman.

And yet there are not two obedients, but one obedient.

For there is one dominion nominal of the husband, and another dominion real of the wife. And yet there are not two dominions, but one dominion.

For like as we are compelled by the Christian verity to acknowledge, that wives must submit themselves to their husbands, and be subject to them in all things,

So are we forbidden by the conjugal faith, that they should be at all influenced by the wills, or pay any regard to their commands.

The man was not created for the woman, but the woman for the man

Yet the man shall be the slave of the woman, and the woman the tyrant of the man.

So that in all things, as is aforesaid, the subjection of the superior to the inferior is to be believed

He therefore that will be married, must thus think of the woman and the man.

Furthermore it is necessary to submissive matrimony, that he also believe rightly the infallibility of the wife.

For the right faith is, that we believe and confess, that the wife is fallible and infallible.

Perfectly fallible and perfectly infallible, of one erring soul, and unerring mind, subsisting: fallible as touching her female sex.

Who although she be fallible and infallible, yet she is not two but one woman, who submitted to lawful marriage, to acquire unlawful dominion; and promised religiously to obey, that she might rule in folly and injustice.

This is the conjugal faith; which except a man believe faithfully, he ought never to be married.

Extempore on a Pair of Scales.

By MARIA FALCONER, aged 15.

WOULD thoughtless men their actions weigh
In Reason's even Scale,
And mind in all they do and say,
That folly don't prevail!
Then might they shun the many ills
Which inattention brings:
By reason balance all their wills,
And happier be than Kings.

A STORY related by Bishop Latimer, in a Sermon against Corruption.

THERE was a Patron in England that had a benefice fallen into his hands, and a good brother of mine came unto him, and brought him thirty apples in a dish, and gave them to his man to carry them to his master. It is like he gave one to his man for his labour, to make up the game, and so there was thirty one. This man cometh to his master, and presented him with the dish of apples, saying, "Sir, such a man hath sent you a dish of fruit, and desireth you to be good unto him for such a benefice."—"Tush, tush, (quoth he) this is no apple matter; I will have none of his apples; I have as good as these in mine own orchard." The man came to the priest again, and told him what his master said. "Then (quoth the priest) desire him to prove one of them for my sake, he shall find them better than they look for." He cut one of them, and found ten pieces of gold in it "Marry (quoth he) this is a good apple." The priest standing not far off, hearing what the gentleman said, cried out and answered, "They are all one apple, I assure you, Sir; they all grew on one tree, and have all one taste." "Well, he is a good fellow, let him have it (quoth the patron) and get you a graft of this tree, and I'll warrant it will stand you in better stead than all St. Paul's learning."

Foreign Intelligence.

PARIS, September 3.

THE privilege of franking letters has been taken from all the miniſters, and many of the nobility, who enjoyed it time immemorial.——The queen and the king's brothers themſelves have generouſly renounced it for the purpoſe of augmenting the royal revenue; and the poſt farmers general have agreed to pay annually to the treaſury, on this account, twelve hundred thouſand livres (12,000l.) more for their leaſe.

The following liſt was in every body's hands on Friday laſt:

M. de la Borde, director both of the finances and the military caiſſes.

M de la Porte, at the head of the navy, inſtead of de Caſtries.

M. de Foulon, ſecretary at war, inſtead of M. de Segur.

M. de Sartine, ſecretary of ſtate for the home department, inſtead of M. de Breteuil.

M. Lambert, controleur general, inſtead of M. Villedeuil, who is counſellor of ſtate, with a gratification of 15,000 livres (625l.) per annum.

M. de Brienne was announced in laſt Friday's Gazette a principal miniſter, and not as premier.—The difference in the word is very eſſential; a premier miniſter may tranſact buſineſs in his cloſet, and ſign his maſter's name, though not in the king's preſence; whereas the principal muſt always work in the preſence of his majeſty. The other miniſters, however, cannot act without the conſent and approbation of the principal.

Another account ſays, that the archbiſhop of Thoulouſe's brother will be the ſecretary at war, and M. Hector, commander of Breſt harbour, at the head of the navy. But let it be as it will, the two gentlemen above-mentioned will certainly be employed in the war and navy departments.

According to Mr. Necker's calculation the town of Paris alone pays almoſt 78 millions of livres in duties and taxes (3 250,000l.) The whole of the revenues a peu pres 585 millions (24,375,000l. ſterling.) Expences in ſome late years 610 millions (almoſt 25 millions and a half ſterling.)

The prince of Conde's apartments, and part of the duke of Bourbon's, at Chantilly, were greatly damaged by a fire, which burnt violently for upwards of two hours in and about the palace on Thurſday laſt.

The fine Cathedral of Bourdeaux, they ſay, is entirely conſumed by fire.

Sept. 4. A negociation is much talked of between the court and parliament, by which it is propoſed to eſtabliſh the territorial impoſt for three years only; and to ſubſtitute ſome other tax for the Timbre; alſo to grant a loan of 100 millions, with an engagement on the part of the court to aſſemble the ſtates general within three years, if the ſtate of the king's finances ſhould require it. M. de Melherbe and the duke de Nivernois, are ſaid to be the agents in this accommodation.

Whether that negociation has taken place or not, it is at leaſt certain, that a memoire was on Saturday delivered to the king by the duke de Lauzun, who is a nephew of the duke of Biron, and is well known in England. It ſubmits a mode of accommodating every diſpute between the king and the parliament; and of raiſing the money wanted, without the aid of the oppoſed taxes.

A correſpondent in Paris has juſt tranſmitted in cyphers, the king's anſwer to the Court of Aids. As far as can be made out, from the obſcurity of the characters, it is as follows:

It is not the buſineſs of my courts of juſtice to demand of me a convocation of the ſtates general; it belongs to me alone to judge whether circumſtances require it, and I have determined in my own mind, that it is not neceſſary; you ſhould not have renewed your demand. I have done more for my people than you required: I have granted them provincial aſſemblies, which are moſt competent to make known the wants and wiſhes of the whole kingdom; and I ſhall never oppoſe whatever their wants may require.

I have transferred my parliament to Troyes from Paris, where that aſſembly had excited a ferment among the people, which their preſence would only ſerve to foment and to increaſe. I ſhall judge when the proper time is come for its reſtoration. My principal object has ever been to know the truth. It was my duty to inſiſt upon my full power to have my edicts regiſtered. If there were any inconveniences in the execution of them, my parliament was wrong in not making me acquainted with them.

I ſhall receive with pleaſure, your remarks and your ſupplications. You may expect every thing from my juſtice and my regard for my people. But you ought to conſider the whole combination of circumſtances; and that I am under the neceſſity of purſuing whatever meaſures will beſt enable me to preſerve fidelity in my engagements.

The Court of Aids, being aſſembled on Monday, decreed ſome further ſupplications to be preſented to his majeſty.

On Monday morning, the king declared the archbiſhop of Thoulouſe his firſt miniſter; nevertheleſs, he will not have precedency in the council, but will ſit there according to his rank, which entitles him to the ſixth place.

LONDON, Sept. 11.

Mr. Grenville is returned to the Continent, with full powers for executing the negociation now on the tapis between his majeſty and the prince of Orange.

An anonymous correſpondent ſays, he has received a letter from Holland, dated Auguſt 28, which ſtates, that by accounts from Rotterdam it appears, that the prince of Brunſwick had received a wound in a ſkirmiſh near Utrecht, which the ſurgeons had declared mortal; and that great alarm was ſpread in conſequence of this affair.

One of the principal articles of the late convention between France and England is, "That no ſhips of war, of any deſcription, on either ſide, ſhall ſail for the Eaſt Indies, without mutual conſent." This article will, in all probability, be one of the beſt preſervatives againſt war, as it has been the policy of France, for near half a century, to ſtrengthen herſelf, previous to a rupture, in her extra European ſettlements. She did ſo in the Weſt Indies in the war of 1774; in America in the war of 1756; and in the Eaſt Indies in the late war, juſt before ſhe declared in favor of America.

The following is the 13th article in the definitive treaty of peace, to which the convention announced in the Gazette alludes:—"Art. XIII. If either of the high contracting parties has granted, or ſhall grant any bounties for encouraging the exportation of any article, being of the growth, produce, or manufacture of his dominions, the other party ſhall be allowed to add to the duties impoſed by virtue of the preſent treaty, on the ſaid goods and merchandiſe imported into his dominions, ſuch an import duty as ſhall be equivalent to ſaid bounty. But this ſtipulation is not to be extended to caſes of reſtoration of duties and impoſts (called drawbacks) which are allowed upon exportation."

Sept. 13. The ſtate of Europe never teemed with grand political events, more than it does at preſent. On the one hand, we ſee the king of France contending not with a ſturdy vaſſal or a riotous mob, as French monarchs formerly have done—but with his parliaments, and the whole body of his people. We ſee the emperor engaged in a ſimilar ſtruggle with that part of his ſubjects, which has always had the beſt pretenſions to liberty and to public ſpirit—while the Dutch are entering into a civil war, that will probably embroil half the powers in Europe—to ſay nothing of Ruſſia and the Porte, who wait only the favorable moment for renewing their former animoſities.

England formerly held the balance between the houſes of Auſtria and Bourbon; but now the ſtate of affairs is ſo much altered, that the rivalſhip lies between England and France, and at the preſent moment the emperor ſeems to hold the balance.

All the hopes of the Dutch now hang on the emperor's neutrality, or his co-operation with the French; and while the queen of France's influence prevails at the court of Verſailles, there is no doubt but there will be a perfect coaleſcence between Imperial and French politics. Beſides, in the preſent diſſatisfaction of their ſubjects, thoſe two ſovereigns ſeem to have a common cauſe.

Within theſe few days, an order came down from the French government to the different ſea ports, impoſing a duty of fifteen pounds per cent. ad valorem, on all carriages imported into France, even for private uſe.

LA BLONDE and the FRENCH ACADEMY.

"Ye little ſtars hide your diminiſhed rays."

THE French Academy have derived honor to themſelves by adjudging the prize of virtue to the woman who ſupported her maſter and miſtreſs for thirty years, and on their death appropriated the hard earnings of her own induſtry to the maintenance of their helpleſs orphans. Heavenly God, what a mind!—what an example! what a contraſt to the HEROES who have had brazen ſtatues erected to their memories, for actions that have entailed miſery and wretchedneſs on thouſands not born at the time of their great exploits! To the memory of theſe men we erect monuments, and write panegyricks, while the modeſt and quiet virtues, which have for their objects, the relief of age, the preſervation of innocence, and the alleviation of diſtreſs, too often remain unnoticed. Such an eſtabliſhment as the French Academy in this country, I mean in relation to the reward of virtue, would reflect great honor on the national character, would promote a ſpirit of emulation in the minds of thouſands, and be rendering a juſt tribute to the virtues of humble life If there be any virtue—if there be any praiſe—think of theſe things, and go and do likewiſe.

Sept. 24. A Liverpool paper ſays, it is not improbable, after all the endeavors of the mediating powers, but that the ſtates of Holland, Weſt Frieſland, and Utrecht, will oblige the king of Pruſſia to proceed to extremities, as he may think proper, in vindication of the Stadtholder's rights, and reſtore the ancient conſtitution of the Republic, now broken and divided by the many jarring reſolves of the above-mentioned ſtates. We confeſs we have our doubts of the probability of the French aſſiſting the ſtates; and it is even confeſſed by the political intelligences on the patriot ſide, that the ſyſtem of the court of France is changed on this head, and that they are to try every method in the way of mediation firſt, and appeaſe, if poſſible, inſtead of irritating the Pruſſian monarch.

It puzzles the brain of the wiſeſt politician to deviſe what kind of ſatisfaction France can offer, or Pruſſia accept, other than that which is impoſſible, viz. a diſavowal of the attempt to ſeize the princeſs of Orange, and the puniſhment of thoſe who did make that attempt. This the ſtates can never ſubmit to, without violating their faith to their ſupporters—and violating truth at the ſame time; for it is well known, and they cannot deny it, that the princeſs has long been the object of their averſion. It is more than four years ſince they openly accuſed her of intriguing politically againſt the ſtates; and when the prince demanded ſatisfaction for this inſult, they refuſed to proſecute the Printers of ſuch libels.

In fact, it may be ſaid of Holland as it was ſaid of America. The deſign to be independent did not, in the latter caſe, take its riſe from the Tea Act. It had before that period riſen to a very conſiderable height. That was the pretence only.—And in Holland, for a ſeries of years, jealouſies have been encouraged and fomented by the ariſtocratic and democratic parties againſt the monarchial or ſtadtholderian party. Real injuries never were complained of. But ſurmiſes, inſinuations, and allegations were made without number, and an averſion to the ſtadtholder's perſon, family, and government, is at the bottom of every proceeding ſince the American war. At that time the Dutch furniſhed the Americans with every neceſſary for carrying on the war againſt Britain, contrary to the faith of nations. When, in conſequence of many fruitleſs remonſtrances, we were impelled to do ourſelves juſtice, the Dutch, from the heſitating and ſlow form of their conſtitution, were unprepared, and throughout the whole war unſucceſsful. They accuſed the ſtadtholder as being in ſecret combination with England; they proved nothing, even after the long enquiry into the affair of the Breſt fleet. But although they proved nothing, they have gone on ever ſince ſuſpecting; and we believe that if many, who are now moſt inveterate againſt the ſtadtholder, were to be aſked the plain queſtion, What has he done? they would be at a loſs to make an anſwer. Hence it is, that no nation will adopt the cauſe of the Dutch, unleſs from intereſted views, for as to the pity of any nation they have no claim. And all that the philoſopher and philanthropiſt can do is, to brood over the impending calamities of a civil war, and to regret that a country that might be happy and flouriſhing, is like to be deluged in blood.

His Pruſſian majeſty has two armies. The one is reported by the duke of York, to be in the moſt perfect order poſſible, both in the groſs, and en detaille; the other was not entirely ſo, at the death of the late king; but at his laſt review, he gave them a very ſevere reprimand, and from that time, not a moment has been loſt in reſtoring their diſcipline and effectual ſervice. It is imagined, by this time they are as perfect as the other.

The mails which arrived yeſterday from Holland bring nothing new reſpecting the ſituation of affairs in that country. Reports of war ſtill continue, though the ultimatum of war or peace ſeems likely to depend on the courts of France and Berlin, whoſe ſentiments on that occaſion ſeem as unknown as they were ſome weeks ago. The moſt hoſtile preparations are making on both ſides, but the event is yet in the womb of time.

PARISIAN TOPICS.

IN the aſſembly of the parliament at Troyes the 27th of Auguſt, ſeveral reſolutions were paſſed, expreſſed in terms the moſt ſtrong that this country has ever known. They reſolve, that the monarchy of France muſt become an abſolute deſpotiſm, if the miniſters in abuſe of the authority and confidence of the king ſhall preſume to iſſue lettres de cachet for exiling or impriſoning the perſons of the true national council, or even of private perſons; if they can, under the pretext of a bed of juſtice diſpoſe of the property of individuals, if they can ſuſpend or impede the courts of juſtice; that the ſtates-general ought on the preſent occaſion to be aſſembled; that the parliament of Paris will, at the hazard of their lives and fortunes firmly maintain their rights, in which alſo are included thoſe of all their fellow-citizens.

Theſe reſolutions were ordered to be printed and diſtributed to the different bailiwicks within the juriſdiction of Paris in 24 hours, and the attorney-general was to attend the parliament on the 29th, to render accounts of the execution of theſe orders.

The reſolutions of the parliament of Grenoble, are ſaid to be ſtill ſtronger than thoſe of Paris.

AMERICA.

BOSTON, November 16.

On Saturday the houſe of repreſentatives ſo far reconſidered their former vote reſpecting a bridge being erected over Beverly ferry, as to give leave to the petitioners to bring in a bill therefor.

Wedneſday evening arrived in Charles-river, the ſhip Fortitude, in 50 days from Liverpool. A gentleman who came in this ſhip has favored us with Liverpool papers to the 24th of September. He informs, that on the night of the 23d, preſs warrants were received from the admiralty office, and which were ſent to every ſea-port in the kingdom, for impreſſing of men for his majeſty's ſervice; that early on the morning of the 24th a general ſweep was made on the river there, by which 1500 men and upwards were obtained; and that, previous to his ſailing, the gang of myrmidons came on board the Fortitude for the like purpoſe, and ordered her crew to turn out, which being done, the commander of the gang was informed, that the ſhip was American, and owned in this country, he then immediately quitted the veſſel and proceeded on their purpoſe elſewhere. The preſs was alſo very hot on ſhore.

The ſame gentleman obſerves, that parties in Liverpool are high, as well as in other parts, who vary very much reſpecting the European politics—ſome poſitively aſſerting, that a general war is inevitable, and others, that the march of the king of Pruſſia's troops will entirely check the progreſs, and put a ſtop to the ravages, of ſo deſolating a calamity. From which difference in opinions we think it impoſſible decidedly to ſay, what the event of theſe commotions may be, or how far the extent of them will be influential in arming the ambitious with the helmet and the ſhield—the ſpear and the target—We can only offer up our prayers at the ſhrine of Concord, and pray that the benign influence of heavenly Peace may be extended throughout the world—from pole to pole, and from one end of the earth to the other.

It is ſaid, that, among others, who will be choſen delegates to the convention which is to meet at the ſtate-houſe in this town, in January next, to decide whether this ſtate will adopt the plan of federal government, his excellency John Hancock, Eſquire, our worthy captain general, and the Hon. James Bowdoin, Eſquire, are talked of. It is ſincerely hoped, ſays a correſpondent, that they may be elected; as from the abilities, patriotiſm and extenſive influence of the former, joined to his high approbation of the plan of federal government, and the acknowledged worth and talents of the latter gentleman, as well as his firm and unremitted attachment to the welfare and happineſs of his country, the publick have every thing to hope.

The reverend Samuel Stillman, we alſo hear, is talked of as a delegate. His profeſſed and firm attachment to the plan of federal government, will, without doubt, render him an object for the choice of his fellow-citizens on the important occaſion.

SALEM, November 13.

On Tueſday laſt the ſupreme judicial court opened in this town, and cloſed their ſeſſion on Saturday; during which, only two criminal cauſes came before them, viz. Paul Averell, of Andover, indicted for forgery, and acquitted; and Elizabeth Leathe, of Lynn, for harbouring thieves and receiving ſtolen goods—was convicted, and ſentenced to be whipped twenty ſtripes, and to be ſold for ſix months: the former part of the ſentence was executed on Saturday morning.

It is a fact, not leſs remarkable than it muſt be pleaſing to the benevolent mind (if it be the conſequence of a declenſion of vice) that for the ſpace of 31 days previous to Saturday laſt, not a ſingle priſoner, of any deſcription, was in cuſtody in the jail in this town—Elizabeth Leathe, above-mentioned, is the only one at preſent there.

The jail in Ipſwich, we are informed, has alſo been entirely empty for ſome time paſt.

RICHMOND, Nov. 17.

QUESTIONS to be diſcuſſed by the Union Society, on Wedneſday evening the 21ſt of November.

A full conſideration of the Fœderal Government lately recommended by the Convention.

Whether a prohibition upon the import of ſpirituous liquors will be advantageous to this ſtate, and how far it will affect the agriculture thereof?

Whether in the preſent ſtate of this commonwealth, agriculture or manufactures ought moſt to be encouraged?

The preſident will take the chair preciſely at ſix o'clock.

Nov. 22. We hear that the guard which was placed at the public jail, by order of the hon. executive, is to be ſtrengthened, and the centinels increaſed. That the city guard is to take poſt at the Court-houſe, and a party of the Richmond dragoons are to ſcour the ſkirts of the town, to aſſiſt the civil power in keeping the peace, and to apprehend all perſons who cannot give a good account of themſelves. Theſe orders are to be continued until the enſuing executions are over.

By the ſhip Speirs, lately arrived in Potowmack from Glaſgow, which place ſhe left the 29th Sept. we have advices that the Pruſſians had marched into Holland, and that there was a very hot preſs for ſeamen in Leith at that time.

Tueſday laſt a mulatto lad (a ſhoemaker) the property of doctor Paſteur, having had a quarrel with a negro of Mr. Trower's; ſtabbed him in the right breaſt upwards of two inches, from which wound it is feared he will die.

An Infallible Cure for a SPRAIN.

Stupe the ſprain with hot brandy and vinegar, then ſpread honey upon a ſtrip of brown paper, and roll it about the ſprain; renew night and morning. It generally cures in a day or two.

CARLISLE, (Pennſylvania) Nov. 14.

A correſpondent obſerves, that he is happy in having it his power to inform the public, that the county of Franklin has diſcovered by their conduct at the late election, that they are in reality friends to order, and juſt government. The choice they have made, of repreſentatives for the ſtate convention, fully evinces the truth of this obſervation, viz. John Alliſon and Richard Beird, Eſquires, who are gentlemen of unblemiſhed characters, well acquainted with the ſcience of government, ſteadily attached to the intereſt of their country, and conſequently advocates for the new federal conſtitution. They have alſo treated the conduct of theſe repreſentatives in the late houſe of aſſembly, with a degree of reſentment, becoming the citizens of a free ſtate; particularly that of their abſconding from the houſe, contrary to the well known principles of government, and at a period when buſineſs of the greateſt importance lay before them. For this reaſon they are prevented from having a ſeat in the convention, although ſome of them had, previous to their late departure from the county, offered themſelves as candidates for that important office. This ſhews that the citizens of Franklin county have too much ſenſe to be impoſed on by antifederal influence, or the productions of deſigning men, notwithſtanding the pains which have been taken to circulate and ſupport them.

The ſtate of Pennſylvania, I am confident, will adopt the new ſyſtem by a large majority; and from every information which I can collect, it will be adopted by a ſufficient majority of the other ſtates—If ſo, we ſhall ſoon taſte the ſweets of independence ſo dearly purchaſed, we ſhall ſoon ſee anarchy and confuſion flying before a government whoſe powers will be coequal with its extent. The Antifederaliſts will then be convinced that ſuch a government is more ſafe, and more reſpectable, than that which admits of popular licenciouſneſs. They will then acknowledge that ſafety cannot exiſt in a government, where there is no check, but the voice of the people at large.

Philadelphia, Nov. 29.

Extract of a letter from a Gentleman at Nevis to his Friend in Baltimore, dated the 5th inſtant.

"There is now the greateſt probability of an immediate war. By the latest accounts from England, a fleet of 18 ſail of the line, under the command of admirals Pigot, Barrington, and Edwards, were cruiſing in the Engliſh channel, and alſo, that ten more line of battle ſhips were fitting out with the greateſt diſpatch, which occaſioned as hot a preſs for ſeamen as took place at any period of the laſt war.

"A frigate is arrived at Antigua, in 21 days from England, with diſpatches to the different governors and commanders on that ſtation; but nothing hath as yet tranſpired, although our politicians are of opinion, that their contents are of a very ſerious nature.

"We are alſo informed, that the preſs was ſo hot in the river Thames, that 2000 ſeamen were impreſſed in one night; that no Britiſh ſubject is permitted to land at Martinico; and that the governor of Dominica has ordered all foreigners to leave the iſland within ten days, unleſs they take the oath of allegiance to his Britannic majeſty."

A correſpondent informs us, that a gentleman of veracity, who arrived here (from Charleſton) laſt Friday, on his way to New York, brings the following intelligence, viz. That trade is now in a very good way there, and that though great quantities of rice and indigo is raiſed, yet ſuch is the demand from foreign markets for theſe articles, that they bear a great price; for before the war the price of rice was but ſix ſhillings, their currency (which is near ſterling) and now it brings from twelve to fourteen ſhillings per cwt. which is more than double.

Tueſday, in Convention, it was moved by Mr. Whitehill, and ſeconded by Mr. Lincoln, "That a proteſt ſhould be entered againſt the motion for ratifying the conſtitution, if required."

It was urged in favor of this motion, that it was the practice of the legiſlature of Pennſylvania, and that the minority might thereby juſtify their votes to their conſtituents and to poſterity.

Againſt it, it was ſaid, the practice of the legiſlature of Pennſylvania was ſingular in this particular, and that it had done more miſchief than good in the ſtate; that it would produce long replies from the majority in defence of their votes, and that this would greatly ſwell the files, and encreaſe the expence of printing our journals; that entering a proteſt would only ſerve to inflame and diſtract the ſtate unneceſſarily upon a queſtion, that, for the preſent, could not eaſily be reconſidered, or repealed; that the newſpapers were open to the minority for proteſts and addreſſes, and that they had a much more extenſive circulation and influence than the journal of the convention could poſſibly have. The votes being called, there appeared for the queſtion 22, againſt it 44.

The ſpeakers in favor of the motion were, Mr. Whitehill and Mr. Smilie. Againſt it were, Doctor Ruſh, Mr. M'Kean, Mr Wilſon, and Col. Hartley.

On motion to read the firſt article of the propoſed conſtitution for debate, the queſtion was put, and carried. The article being read, Mr. M'Kean ſaid, I riſe to requeſt, that a ſpirit of conciliation and coolneſs may prevail in this diſcuſſion. The wiſeſt and beſt men in all countries and ages have differed on the ſubject of government. The hiſtory of ancient government is ſomewhat obſcure; yet enough has been given us to authoriſe the concluſion, that no two of them were alike. Though China and Sweden are deſpotic governments, they are widely different. The monarchies of France and Spain meet in very few points: nor are there any two republics but differ in their forms and powers of government. They all deſcend from the ſame parent (the People) but they are of various features and complexions. Even in religion we diſagree, to confine ourſelves to one ſect—how various are the doctrines, church diſcipline and worſhip of Chriſtians—though we have but one rule—the New Teſtament—the new Conſtitution (if you pleaſe.) And if men think ſo differently on the moſt important ſubject which can intereſt ſociety, how ſilly, how extremely narrow is it, that we ſhould quarrel, becauſe we cannot altogether agree on the ſubject before us. I hope, our enquiries will have information for their object, and that our debates will be conducted with decency, and the utmoſt moderation.

This ſpeech muſt be admired by every friend to order and diſpaſſionate reaſoning, and will no doubt greatly influence the deliberations of the convention.

While the convention were debating on the propriety of referring the conſtitution to a committee of the whole, Mr. Wilſon made the following obſervation: "Shall we, Sir, while we contemplate a great and magnificent edifice, condeſcend, like a fly, with its microſcopic eye, to ſcrutinize the imperfections of a ſingle brick?" Mr. Findley, retorting the metaphor, ſaid, "Shall we not, Sir, when we are about to erect a large and expenſive fabric (for as far as it reſpects us, we are about to erect this mighty fabric of government in Pennſylvania) examine and compare the materials of which we mean to compoſe it, fitting and combining the parts with each other, and rejecting every thing that is uſeleſs and rotten?" "That (concluded Dr. Ruſh) is not our ſituation. We are not at this time called upon to raiſe the ſtructure. The houſe is already built for us, and we are only aſked, whether we chuſe to occupy it? If we find its apartments commodious, and, upon the whole, that it is well calculated to ſhelter us from the inclemencies of the ſtorm that threatens, we ſhall act prudently in entering it; if otherwiſe, all that is required of us is to return the key to thoſe who have built and offered it for our uſe."

It was obſerved in the convention, that the federal convention had exceeded the powers given to them by the ſeveral legiſlatures; but Mr. Wilſon obſerved, that however foreign the queſtion was to the preſent buſineſs, he would place it in its proper light. The federal convention did not act at all upon the powers given them by the ſtates, but they proceeded upon original principles, and having framed a conſtitution which they thought would promote the happineſs of their country, they have ſubmitted it to their conſideration, who may either adopt or reject it, as they pleaſe.

A writer in a late Maſſachuſetts newſpaper ſays—— "It is a fact, that the internal reſources of America never were in ſo flouriſhing a ſtate as at preſent. The wounds of the war are in a great degree healed; the ſtock on our farms, which had been leſſened by it, is replaced; and every traveller agrees, that there are more acres of land under tillage in the ſeveral ſtates this year, than were ever known to be cultivated in a ſeaſon ſince the firſt white man ſat foot on the continent. Add to this, our commerce, the year paſt, has taken a more favourable turn than it has experienced at any former period ſince the war, the exports of Maſſachuſetts, as has been aſſerted by very good calculators, having exceeded the imports by one hundred thouſand pounds. If this be the ſtate of our commerce, under its preſent innumerable embarraſſments, to what a noble height of proſperity muſt it arrive, under the protection of an efficient national government!"

One other lot, ſituate on the weſt ſide of the Lower Ferry road, extending into the river Schuylkill, near Mr. Pemberton's country ſeat; bounded ſouthwardly with William Shipley's ground; a very beautiful ſituation for a ſummer retreat; containing about eight acres of ground. Philadelphia, October 16, 1787.

For Griſt Mills & other Water Works

On an extenſive Plan,

One of the beſt ſituations in America is offered

FOR SALE,

Together With

Batſto Iron-Works,

At the forks of Little Egg-Harbour river, one of the moſt healthy ſpots in New Jerſey, 38 miles by land from Philadelphia, and within a few hours ſail of New York.

THE river, communicating with the ſea by the beſt inlet on the Jerſey coaſt, is navigable for veſſels of 200 tons within a few miles of the works; thoſe of 100 tons may approach within one mile; flats and ſcows, carrying 10 or 12 tons, load and unload at the works. The uſual freight to New York or Philadelphia is 10 ſhillings per ton. The furnace ſtream affords plenty of water, in the dryeſt ſeaſon, for 3 or 4 pair of mill ſtones, beſides ſupplying the iron works.——An excellent dam, which has been increaſing in ſtrength many years by the cinder from the furnace, is well ſecured from the danger of freſhes, and the works are ſcarcely ever injured or delayed by either ice or back-water, though the tide ſwells to the foot of the dam: mills may therefore be erected at a moderate expence. This being a part of the country in which many people and many teams are neceſſarily employed in collecting and preparing for market the iron and lumber with which it abounds, and at the ſame time illy adapted to the raiſing of grain for their ſupport, there is, and muſt continue to be, a demand for large quantities of midlings, cornell, ſhorts and bran, at advanced prices; and the conveniencp of conveying flour at a light expence, either to New York or Philadelphia, or to more diſtant markets, will not be overlooked nor conſidered as of ſmall importance, eſpecially as there are few mill ſeats of any conſiderable capacity equally adapted to the New York market, which is not unfrequently ſupplied with ſuperfine flour from Philadelphia. A choice of the various kinds of wheat may be drawn to this ſeat from Virginia, Maryland, Delaware, New Jerſey, and New York with greater eaſe and convenience than to almoſt any other mills now in being.

The FURNACE, which by the extenſive lands annexed to it, is abundantly ſupplied with wood and ore, is now in blaſt, and is noted for producing the beſt hollow ware in America, the metal being peculiarly well adapted to the making of caſtings of all kinds, as well as excellent bar iron.

A FORGE, with four fires and two hammers, belongs to the eſtate, and ſtands about half a mile from the furnace, on another fine ſtream which affords plenty of water.

A SLITTING and ROLLING MILL, having been diſuſed for the laſt two or three years, may want ſome repairs to prepare it for uſe; but the fore-bays and gates are in perfect order, and being in the proper ſpot for griſt mills, may be appropriated to that uſe.

Two SAW MILLS in good order, and a ſmall Griſt Mill.

The MANSION HOUSE is elegantly ſituated about 100 yards from the furnace, on an height which commands a view of the whole works, and of the two villages formed by the ſurrounding buildings belonging to the eſtate, ſuch as barns, ſtables, coal houſes, workſhops, ſtorehouſes and dwellings for work men. Adjoining the manſion houſe is a large and fruitful garden, affording plenty of vegetables, and well ſtored with choſen fruit trees: alſo a young bearing orchard, containing near 2000 apple trees, moſtly grafted.

Theſe excellent accommodations for extenſive and profitable manufactories, are offered to ſale at a very low rate, and on terms of payment calculated for the eaſe of the purchaſer, who may pay the greater part in the produce of the Iron Works, at a price to be agreed upon; and they are capable of producing more in one year, than will pay the whole price demanded.

For particulars, apply to WILLIAM RICHARDS, at the ſaid Works, JOHN COX, at Bloomſbury, near Trenton, or CHARLES PETTIT, in Philadelphia.

GOLDSMITH'S EPITAPH.

By a CLERGYMAN of the Kingdom of IRELAND.

TO Goldſmith's Fame could things external give
Helps that might ſerve, ſupports whereon to live;
Thoſe would the love of Intimates beſtow;
Thoſe from fidelity of Friends would flow;
Thoſe his enraptur'd Readers crowding, wou'd
Preſent as tributes of their gratitude;
As here they aim his Memory to ſave;
Deathleſs triumphant o'er the ſleeping grave;
But needleſs 'twere on foreign aid to call;
His own intriſic worth ſurpaſſes all.
Phyſician, Poet, and Hiſtorian, he Great in each name, tranſcendant in the three;
Almoſt in every kind of writing try'd,
Practis'd in none but what he beautify'd.
Maſter of all his aims, you muſt ſubmit
To weep or laugh, as he intended it.
The human heart with gentle ſway he bends;
But leans its biaſs to the nobleſt ends.
Sublime, his genius quick diverſify'd:
His ſtyle grand, graceful, flowing like a tide.
Hibernia's ſon, by Longford county claim'd:
His birth place Pallas, ſure by omen nam'd;
His College ſtudies, Dublin boaſts to ſhare:
London laments that he expired there.

A PRUSSIAN ANECDOTE,

By Mr. SHERLOCK.

THE Count de Peltzer, an officer in the Pruſſian ſervice, was the only ſon of a widow near ſixty years old. He was handſome, brave to an exceſs, and deeply in love with Mademoiſelle de Benſkow. She was in her eighteenth year, gentle, pretty, and born with an extreme ſenſibility. Her lover, juſt turned of twenty, was loved with a paſſion equal to his own, and the day was fixed to make them happy. It was the 20th of June, 1778.

The Pruſſian troops are always ready to take the field; and on the 19th of June, at ten o'clock at night, the count's regiment received orders to march at midnight for Sileſia. He was at Berlin, and his miſtreſs at a country houſe four leagues from the town. He ſet off conſequently without ſeeing her; and he wrote to her from the firſt place where he ſtopped, that it was impoſſible for him to live without her, that it was eſſential to his happineſs that ſhe ſhould follow him immediately, and that they ſhould be married in Sileſia. He wrote at the ſame time to her brother, who was his moſt intimate friend, to plead his cauſe with her parents. She ſet out, accompanied by this brother, and her lover's mother. Never did the ſands of Brandenburg appear ſo heavy as to this charming girl; but at length the journey ended, and ſhe arrived at the town of Horſtadt:—it was in the morning, and "never" ſaid her brother to me, "did my eyes ſee a woman lovelier than my ſiſter. The exerciſe of her journey had added to her bloom, and her eyes painted what paſſed in her heart." But, O human proſpects! how deceitful are you? How near is the moment of wretchedneſs to the moment of felicity? The carriage is ſtopped to let paſs ſome ſoldiers, who, advancing with ſlow ſteps, bore in their arms a wounded officer. The tender heart of the young lady was affected at the ſight: ſhe little expected that it was her lover. Some Auſtrian ſtrangers had approached this town, and the young count went out to repulſe them. Burning to diſtinguiſh himſelf, he ruſhed with ardour before his troop, and fell the victim of his unhappy impetuoſity.

To deſcribe the ſituation of this unfortunate young woman, would be at once to inſult your heart and your imagination. Her lover is placed in his bed; his mother at his feet, and his miſtreſs holds his hand. "O Charlotte," cried he, opening a dying eye—he wanted to ſpeak; but his voice broke, and he melted into tears. His tone had pierced the ſoul of his miſtreſs; ſhe loſt her reaſon, and—— "No,—I will not ſurvive you," cried ſhe, quite frantic, and ſeizing a ſword. They diſarmed her; and he made a ſign with his hand that they ſhould bring her to his bed-ſide. She came; he graſped her arm; and after two painful efforts to ſpeak, he ſays with a ſob, "Live my Charlotte, to comfort my mother,"—and expired.——When I paſſed through Berlin, in July 1779, the unfortunate lady had not recovered her ſenſes.

AMERICA.

NEW-YORK, November 22.

The Monument erected in this city, to the memory of that patriotic warrior, the late General MONTGOMERY, has received the following elegant ornamental additions, deſigned by Major L'Enfant, the gentleman to whom we are indebted for ſuperintending its original erection:——"Hymen! extinguiſhing his torch, mourns over the tomb. From behind the pyramid riſes a Sun with thirteen rays, which enlightens the quarter of a terreſtrial globe emblematical of America. Above the whole is the American Eagle flying from eaſt to weſt, carrying in his talons a ſtarry curtain, in which the globe appears to have been wrapped." It muſt give real ſatisfaction to every patriotic mind, to behold the attention of genius and taſte thus generouſly employed, in celebrating American heroiſm and departed virtue.

On the 24th of Auguſt, in lat. 45, 46. N. long. 38, 0. W. captain Collinſon (of the Backhouſe, which arrived at Liverpool on the 23d Sept from Grenada) being about a mile aſtern of a French Eaſt-Indiaman, which was bound for l'Orient, perceived a man floating on the water towards him; on which he threw an oar and an empty caſk overboard, for preſent aſſiſtance, and got his boat out as ſoon as poſſible, with which he was fortunate enough to get him on board his veſſel. On queſtioning him, he learned that he was one of three men, who, for ſome miſbehaviour, had been ſentenced, in the Eaſt-Indies, to be ſent to Old France, and there ſhot to death by way of example; when, ſeeing the Backhouſe ſo near, and being releaſed from the irons with which he had been for a long time confined, impelled by that natural love of life which is implanted in our nature, he took the reſolution of getting out of one of the port-holes, and dropping into the water, chuſing to run the riſque of drowning, rather than proceed to his native country, where certain death awaited him; and this riſque was very great, as he ſeemed to know little more of ſwimming, than juſt to keep himſelf above the water; for though the oar, which was thrown overboard, came within five yards, he ſeemed not to know how to get nearer to it.

In the Liverpool papers, the Eliza, Mercer, and the Betſey and Amey, Watt, are advertiſed for New-York;

The Hall, Ward, for Philadelphia:
The Iriſh Volunteer, Cocke, for Baltimore;
The Peace and Plenty, Williams, for Boſton;
The Henderſon, Steel, and the Abbey, Braithwait, for James River;
The Anne, Tolſon; Clio, Dawſon; Jane, Watſon; and Ardeer, Sutherland; for Charleſton.

They were all to ſail early in October.

Nov 26. The war that has commenced between the Ruſſians and Turks—the triumph of the ſtadtholder of Holland, and his party, over the Dutch patriots—the diſputes in Germany between the emperor, and his ſubjects in Flanders—form the great topic of European information of the political ſtate of affairs in the old world.

Nov. 27. Yeſterday, being the anniverſary of the evacuation of this city by the Britiſh troops, in 1783, the ſame was appointed in orders, for the annual review of General Malcom's brigade of militia. In the morning the regiments muſtered at ther ſeveral regimental parades, and marched into Queen ſtreet, where they formed the brigade; from whence they marched to a field aſſigned for their reception. The troops were reviewed by His Excellency the Commander in Chief, and ſeveral other perſonages of rank and diſtinction. They were likewiſe inſpected by the proper officers. The Legion (compoſed of the uniformed troops of the reſpective regiments, and Colonel Bauman's corps of artillery) performed, in the preſence of a numerous concourſe of ſpectators, a variety of firings and evolutions, with great celerity and exactitude. The Legion, on this occaſion, was commanded by Lieut. Col. Lewis.

We learn by the lateſt advices from Europe, that the Pruſſian army had made an attack on the Patriotic forces near Amſterdam, and were repulſed with conſiderable loſs.

Philadelphia, Nov. 30.

Yeſterday afternoon, the honorable the General Aſſembly of this ſtate adjourned till the third Tueſday in February next.

Captain Henry Williams, of Salem, arrived here yeſterday from St. Euſtatia, having had a paſſage of 18 days, he informs that it was currently reported there, that Admiral Hood, with 15 ſail of Britiſh ſhips of war, had arrived at Barbadoes; that the inhabitants of St. Kitts were in great alarm, and had ſet 500 negroes at work to fortify Brimſtone-Hill—That the new Conſtitution lately formed by the General Convention for the Government of the United States, had been received at St Euſtatia, and was read with warm approbation; and the inhabitants, expecting a revolution in the Dutch government, ſaid they ſhould remove to theſe States, if the good government propoſed by this conſtitution ſhould be eſtabliſhed.

In the convention on Wedneſday laſt, the debates were chiefly confined to the queſtion of a bill of rights for the federal conſtitution. In favor of it was ſaid, it was common and neceſſary; that it exiſted in Great Britain, and that it would be an additional ſecurity for our liberties. Againſt it was urged, that bills of rights in England were a gift of the crown; that the liberties of the people in that country originated with the king: but that the caſe was widely different in the United States. Here liberty originated with the people. Why then ſhould the people by a bill of rights convey or grant to themſelves what was their own inherent and natural right? It was further ſaid, that only five of the thirteen ſtates had bills of rights in their conſtitutions, and that even thoſe were adopted at a time when we were ignorant of the nature and forms of government. Several objections were made by Mr. Whitehill to the Congreſs having the power of altering the times and places of electing the houſe of repreſentatives. To which Mr. Wilſon replied, that it was neceſſary for Congreſs to poſſeſs this power, as the means of its own preſervation, otherwiſe an invaſion, a civil war, a faction, or a ſeceſſion of a minority of the Aſſembly, might at any time prevent the repreſentation of a ſtate in Congreſs.

It was further urged by Mr. Whitehill, that the federal conſtitution annihilated the ſtate governments. To this Mr. Wilſon replied, by obſerving, that the Congreſs and the ſtate governments muſt ſtand or fall together, for that the election of the preſident, ſenators, and houſe of repreſentatives, all made the ſtate governments eſſential to the very exiſtence of Congreſs.

The ſpeakers againſt the conſtitution ſhewed great ingenuity and zeal, while the advocates of it, Mr. Wilſon and Mr. M'Kean, ſhewed equal candour, and a profound knowledge of the principles and forms of government.

On Thurſday the 22d inſtant, a Commencement was held at the Univerſity, in the preſence of the Truſtees, the Supreme Executive Council, the General Aſſembly, the State Convention, the Magiſtrates, the Clergy, and a very large number of the ladies and gentlemen of the city. At ten o'clock in the forenoon the Truſtees and Faculty proceeded from the Apparatus Chamber to the Great Hall. Their entrance was uſhered in by ſolemn inſtrumental muſic, which continued till the ſeveral public bodies were ſeated.

Vocal muſic, having a fine preparatory effect, now took place for a few moments.

The Provoſt introduced the exerciſes of the graduates by prayer.

Then they followed in this order:

The Salutatory Oration, in Latin, on claſſic and ſcientific ſtudies; their eminent utility, and the manner of conducting them—cloſing with due compliments to the Powers of Government, and an eulogium on the Univerſity; by Mr. James Sergeant Ewing.

An Oration againſt the idea of the Declenſion (or as ſome would term it, the Deterioration) of the human ſpecies, in reſpect of agility, ſtrength, beauty and morals—obſervations on the virtue and public ſpirit of the Philadelphians; by Mr. George Duffield.

A pauſe, embelliſhed by inſtrumental muſic—ſolemn.

An oration on commerce—its general hiſtory—its happy national influence, when properly conducted—its peculiar accommodation to the circumſtances of theſe United States; by Mr. Henry Wikoff.

Oration againſt commerce: portraying its general complexion and ſpirit, as ſelfiſh, and inimical to the morals of a people—ſome exceptions however to be admitted—an immenſe preference to be given to agriculture, and home manufactures; by Mr. Samuel Smith.

Oration on the luxurious taſte and manners of the times—effects of our extravagant importations of foreign articles—neceſſity of having theſe evils reſtrained—an agreeable proſpect opening; by Mr. James Meaſe.

Oration on the reſpective influences of virtue and knowledge in democratical governments—ſhewing, that although virtue is of importance, and indiſpenſible, yet knowledge muſt precede it—knowledge in a ſtate will produce virtue, but virtue will not always produce knowledge; by Mr. James Woodhouſe.

A ſhort interval—inſtrumental muſic.

The conferring of Degrees, by the Provoſt.

The valedictory oration on Education, conſidered both in a moral and ſcientific view; the high department of parents with regard to the early happy caſt which they might give to tender minds; the pre-eminent influence of mothers. Addreſs to the Truſtees and Faculty; pathetic taking of leave of the ſtudents; by Mr. Benjamin Franklin Bache.

Vocal muſic——an original American performance.

An addreſs to the claſs and other ſtudents, holding out to them due encouragement, to purſue and make themſelves perfect in the branches of uſeful knowledge; keeping in conſtant view the approbation of the Deity and the happineſs of the human ſpecies; by the Provoſt.

Valedictory prayer, by the Vice-Provoſt.

Sublime vocal muſic, varied much in expreſſion, accompanied with ECHO, concluded the entertainment.

The vocal muſic was under the direction of Mr. Ott.

The Degree of Batchelor of Arts was conferred on the following young gentlemen: Meſſrs. Benjamin Franklin Bache, George Duffield, James Sergeant Ewing, James Meaſe, Samuel Smith, Evan Thomas of Maryland, Henry Wikoff, James Woodhouſe.

The Degree of Maſter of Arts on the following gentlemen: Meſſrs. William Parker, of Charleſton, S. C. Charles Goldſborough, of Maryland, Henry Stuber, William Millar.

The Degree of Batchelor of Medicine, on the following gentlemen: Meſſrs. John Ramſey, of South Carolina, Thomas C. James, Peter Keene, Andrew M'Dowell, Robert Coleman.

The Honorary Degree of Doctor of Laws was conferred on the Marquis de la Fayette, and the honorable Dr. Hugh Williamſon, in conſideration of their literary abilities and eminence in life.

The Honorary Degree of Maſter of Arts was conferred on Mr. Benjamin Smith Barton, in conſideration of his literary merit.

The exerciſes of the ſeveral ſpeakers, on account of their good ſenſe, accuracy and handſome manner of delivery, met with every teſtimony of approbation from the diſcerning and crowded audience.

The following gentlemen are elected members of convention for Delaware ſtate:

Newcaſtle County.—James Latimer, John James, Gunning Bedford, ſenior, Gunning Bedford, junior, Kinſey Johns, Nicholas Way, James Black, Thomas Watſon, Thomas Duff, Solomon Maxwell.

Monday laſt arrived at New-York

the ſhip Jenny, captain Smith, 38 days from Cork, and brig Sally, captain Moore, 40 days from Londonderry. Theſe veſſels brought newſpapers to the 14th October, from which we have ſelected the following Intelligence.

VIENNA, Sept. 10.

THE army which the emperor has marched into Flanders, in order to enforce the new regulations, amounts to 50,000 men.

It has been obſerved that the march of ſo large an army to the Auſtrian Low Countries, betrays ſome other deſign of the emperor, than the mere reducing his wrong headed ſubjects to good order and obedience. What collateral objects the imperial Joſeph may have in view, time alone will develope; but if that wiſe prince has read the hiſtory of our American war, and it is reaſonable to ſuppoſe he may have given it ſome attention, he will there ſee the folly of not taking effectual meaſures to ſuppreſs an infant rebellion. If he has no other reaſons for ſending 50.000 men into Flanders, but to ſecure ſubmiſſion, he is juſtified in doing it:—And every good politician will think, as the event will prove, that he has acted as becomes him.

HAGUE, Sept. 21.

The prince of Orange arrived here yeſterday at 2 o'clock in the afternoon, and was received by the deputations from the ſtates general, the ſtates of Holland, the council of ſtate, and committees, the equeſtrian order, the courts of juſtice, and the different colleges. The deputies of 15 towns were preſent in the aſſembly of the ſtates of Holland yeſterday, when they unanimouſly voted an addreſs to the ſtadtholder; and this day they came to a reſolution declaring him reinſtated in all his rights. It is impoſſible to deſcribe the univerſal joy that prevails here among all ranks of people.

The ſtates of Holland and Weſt Frieſland on Tueſday night laſt came to the following reſolutions:—1. To annul the reſolutions by which the ſtadtholder had been ſuſpended from exerciſing his charges. 2. To invite his highneſs to repair to the Hague. 3. To reſtore the command of the garriſon of the Hague to his highneſs. 4. To annul the commiſſion granted for the defence of the province and city of Utrecht. 5. To ſend commiſſioners to the duke of Brunſwick to requeſt of him not to ſend any troops into this place.

UTRECHT, Sept. 21.

On the 17th inſt at 10 in the forenoon the Pruſſian troops ſummoned the city of Naarden to ſurrender; but M. de Matha in the name of the commiſſion of defences refuſed to capitulate on any terms.

Sept. 23. The ſtates (late aſſembled at Ameſsfort) are returned to this city, and the ancient regency has reſumed its charge.

The day before yeſterday his ſerene highneſs the prince of Orange made his entry here amidſt the acclamations and cries of Vive Orange, &c. Triumphal arches were raiſed, and flags of Orange colour hoiſted in many places.

The ſame day 12 Pruſſian Huſſars brought from Gorcum and its environs, above 200 priſoners of the regiments of Sternbach, Saxe Gotha, Pallardi, Aardenbrook, &c.

ROTTERDAM, Sept. 20.

At 9 o'clock a detachment of Pruſſian Huſſars came into the city and halted before the ſtadthouſe—the officer in command went up to give notice to the magiſtrates of his charge, and then departed. At noon a publication was read at the ſtadthouſe preventing the wearing of the Orange cockades; and notice was given by the ſcout, burgher maſters, and magiſtrates, that they thought proper to let 250 Pruſſian Huſſars come in by conſent of the magiſtracy, and warned all perſons to conduct themſelves peaceably upon the entrance, and during the ſtay of that corps, they being aſſured that the ſtricteſt diſcipline would be obſerved; which publication was received with acclamations and demonſtrations of joy: At 11 o'clock the preſident burgher maſter aſſembled the old council, which had unlawfully been removed ever ſince the 23d of April; who, upon meeting, declared, that having had no opportunity to convene ſince that time in a lawful manner, the preſident Collol d'Eſſeury aſſured them, he would never have left the council had he not been forcibly drove from it; he took his lawful ſeat to aſſiſt the council in their deliberations, to which other members concurred; and taking up their deliberations from the 23d of April, they declared all the ſubſequent acts to be null and void; immediately after the burgher maſter, Van Reefting, and the counſellors Van Teylengen, Van Mierop, & Yzendoorn, were appointed and charged to go to the aſſembly of their high mightineſſes the ſtates general, and inform them, that they approved of their high mightineſſes reſolution of the 18th inſt. with reſpect to the reſtoring his ſerene highneſs to his honour, and that of giving ſatisfaction to her ſerene highneſs.

A letter was ſent to the duke of Brunſwick, informing him, that this day the lawful regency reſumed their ſeats at the ſtadthouſe; that his troops ſhould be received as friends; and requeſting him to charge them, that they might keep a ſtrict military diſcipline. Every thing remains quiet, and no damage has been done to any one.

We hear from Leyden, that liberty is given to every body to wear Orange cockades; and a publication has been iſſued to prevent riots; the Orange flag was hoiſted at ſtadthouſe tower, and a univerſal joy enſued.

The reports circulated, of the marching of the French troops are groundleſs.

The laſt three days have produced a wonderful and ſudden revolution in Holland. The world is not unacquainted with the various violent meaſures purſued for ſome time paſt by the party which called themſelves patriots, and which were at laſt got to an unparalleled height of oppreſſion. Even ſo late as the latter end of laſt week the moſt unconſtitutional reſolves took place; but ſuddenly a change is ſeen in affairs; it has happened the deſtiny of Utrecht, that city which from the firſt ſhewed itſelf the moſt forward in depriving the prince of Orange of his prerogatives, and overturning the old conſtitutional government, ſhould be the firſt to undergo diſgrace and ſhame; and notwithſtanding the fortifications raiſed, and ſums expended in keeping troops there, they were ſummoned together laſt Sunday morning at 3 o'clock by their general, the famous Rhyn Graaf Van Salm, and informed that the Guelderland troops, in conjunction with thoſe of Pruſſia, were marching down to attack the town, which, as it was not poſſible for them to defend, muſt be abandoned, and it was accordingly done with all poſſible ſpeed. Gorcum was ſummoned to ſurrender at 6 o'clock yeſterday morning, and taken, a few ſhot only being fired into it. Dort has ſurrendered this day, and Gouda is maſtered by the Orange party of its own inhabitants. Rotterdam has agreed to ſurrender on the firſt approach of the troops, who are expected here to-morrow noon. Nothing is ſeen in this town but Orange cockades, and every mark of attachment to the long perſecuted houſe of Orange. However, every meaſure is taken to preſerve the peace of the town, and an underſtanding has taken place between the two parties, which was firſt nobly offered by that of the Orange. It is ſurpriſing to behold the patriotic party; that daring language and haughty deportment, which hitherto diſtinguiſhed them, is vaniſhed; they are quite confounded and creſt fallen, and ſeveral of their leaders have fled the town.

The prince's party in the Hague are likewiſe triumphant, and we hear continual accounts of the ſame prevailing in the other towns and villages of Holland, which cannot fail of becoming general throughout the Seven Provinces.

DUBLIN, October 6.

The Amſterdam Gazette of the 28th ult. brings intelligence of a circumſtance which has, in all probability, terminated by this time, the contention which ſubſiſted in Holland. Under the article, dated the 27th, it is announced, that on the preceding Friday or Saturday the rhyngrave of Salm ſet off (a la ſourdine) from his poſt in the environs of Amſterdam without taking leave, or communicating his intention to a ſingle officer of his legion; leaving his anti ſtadtholderian friends to friends to ſhift for themſelves as well as they were able. When this information was received, they had no account whither this active general directed his flight; but it evidently appears, that, deſtitute now of a military leader, and not well knowing whom to truſt, they are in the utmoſt perplexity. The conduct of the rhyngrave very reaſonably diſpoſes us to believe that the evacuation of Utrecht aroſe from a predetermined dereliction of the truſt repoſed in him, which is confirmed by its having ſince been diſcovered that he aſſociated with the friends and tampered with the adverſaries of the Orange family previous to his departure. The next accounts from Amſterdam will therefore in all likelihood bring advice that the Amſterdamers have relinquiſhed their oppoſition, and there can be ſcarce a doubt, from the complexion of their affairs, of the ſtadtholder's being, by this time, reinſtated in all his former privileges.

Letters were on Friday received in town from London, which mention that Mr. Grenville had not received a very ſatisfactory reply to his enquiries at the court of France, the French miniſter having declared, that as Britain had proceeded to arm, in ſo extraordinary a manner, it became neceſſary for the French nation to imitate her example, and until they had made equal preparation, Mr. Grenville could not be ſatisfied as to the particular points which were the object of his miſſion. It is probable the next packets will ſatisfy the public reſpecting Mr. Grenville's ſucceſs, as it is expected he has by this time arrived from Paris, and we hope to be informed, with more agreeable information than what thoſe letters ſtate as the iſſue of his viſit.

LONDON-DERRY, Oct. 9.

Our readers will ſee under the London head, the ſubſtance of yeſterday's packets; and ſeveral private letters, of a late date, corroborate the intelligence, by ſaying, "it is now the general opinion, that an immediate war is almoſt inevitable."—The game played by France, on this occaſion, exceeds any thing ever before exhibited by Gauliſh policy; they have led the Dutch into the moſt diſgraceful and humiliating ſituation at home, whilſt they have been contriving plans to ſeize ſome of their moſt important ſettlements abroad. If it is true, that the French are now actually in poſſeſſion of the Cape of Good Hope, they will have a perpetual check and controul over every power in Europe who trade to the Eaſt Indies.—It has long been the opinion, that France, having diſmembered Britain from her poſſeſſions in North-America, would next endeavor to deprive her of thoſe in the Eaſt-Indies, but no man conceived that they would ſo ſoon enter on ſo bold an undertaking. It is not yet five years ſince the ſword was ſheathed by the rival powers of France and Britain.

LONDON, Sept. 17.

The WAR which has been declared by the ſublime porte againſt the Ruſſians, has been attributed to the preponderating influence of the grand vizir. That miniſter, attached to the ancient principles of the Ottoman government, got over the majority of the divan to his opinion.

It is ſaid in Paris, that the grand vizir has already moved ſome detachments of troops towards Cuban and Georgia, in order to gain into his intereſts all the Tartar Hordes—and that there is no doubt but that he will make a ſpeedy conqueſt of the countries, lately occupied by her imperial majeſty.

The Ruſſians in the late war, taught the Turks at length to beat them—juſt as they had themſelves been taught under the czar Peter, to beat Charles the XIIth's army. If the Janiſſaries have profited by the leſſons they then got and from what they might ſince have got from the French officers—much may be expected from the native bravery and enthuſiaſm of the Turks.

The firſt action that we may expect to hear of between the Muſcovites and the Turks, will moſt probably be a naval one on the Black Sea, where the Turks are ſuperior, and therefore may expect to have the advantage.

We are not to omen of the approaching war between the porte and Ruſſia, from the events of the laſt. In the concluding campaign, the Turks gained ſeveral advantages over count Romanzow—in conſequence of having adopted the European diſcipline—and that diſcipline—they have ſince practiſed.—In the artillery and engineer department they are moſt deficient.

The report of the capture of Leuwarden by the patriots of Friezland, is not yet confirmed; but a party to the number of 200, ſome days ago took poſſeſſion of an advantageous poſt near Mackum, which opens for them a communication with the province of Holland. It is ſaid they have mediated a deſign upon Harlingen, but the Orange party having fortified it, they did not make the attempt.

It is reported, that the French premier, archbiſhop of Thoulouſe, takes a decided part in favour of the Dutch republic, and has warmly declared in council, that France will looſe her weight in the cabinets of Europe, if ſhe accedes to the deſigns of St. James's and Berlin, and that the honor of the king, and the intereſt of the kingdom, requires that the deſigns of the court of Pruſſia ſhould be refitted.

The fact of the French cabinet having changed their ambaſſador at the Hague, is a ſtronger circumſtance in favor of peace, than any other that can be adduced. Becauſe Monſieur Verac, having repeatedly pledged himſelf that a competent and effectual ſupport ſhould be given to the Hollanders againſt the ſtadtholder, could not recede from theſe aſſurances. And the conjectures in favor of a peace are further ſtrengthened by the choice of the man who is appointed M. Verac's ſucceſſor. This is no other than the celebrated M. S. Prieſt, who ſome years ago was the French miniſter at Conſtantinople, and who was the principal, if not the only man who made the laſt peace between the Ruſſians and Turks.

Sept. 19. It is difficult to determine at preſent, what ſtate holds the balance of power. The emperor may, at firſt view, ſeem to do it; but there are three obſtacles to interfere materially with the free exerciſe of this power. In the firſt place, admitting he could do it in the ſouthern ſtates of Europe, his attention is alſo called to the northern, by the war between the Turks and Ruſſians, and he certainly has not force enough to give the law on both ſides—there is ſome doubt, whether he can do it on one: For, ſecondly, his troops are ſo ill appointed, ſo badly diſciplined, and ſo diſaffected, that there is no confidence to be placed in them.—Thirdly, the preſent temper of his ſubjects may render it difficult for him to preſerve his power at home.

If England acts with policy, coolneſs, and vigor, there is little doubt but ſhe may poſſeſs herſelf, jointly with Spain, but in a ſuperior degree, of this important ſtation. It is a ſtrong circumſtance in our favour, that the longer we keep back, the more powerful we ſhall be, and the more able to act with effect at laſt. On the contrary, the belligerent powers will, of courſe, be growing weaker.

October 2. Yeſterday an expreſs arrived from Mr. Grenville at Paris: As to the purport of the diſpatches brought, nothing particular has tranſpired:—all we have been able to learn in general is, that they were not ſo favourable as former reports gave us reaſon to expect; and ſome, who pretend to know more than others, do not heſitate to ſay, that, from the tenor of the advices received, a war ſeems almoſt inevitable.

In conſequence of the expreſs from Mr. Grenville yeſterday, orders were iſſued from the admiralty, for impreſſing ſeamen in a more ſtrict and peremtory manner than before.

It is ſaid that the French muſt, by this time, be in poſſeſſion of the Cape of Good Hope. This may appear odd at firſt ſight, but we are credibly informed that they have been ſending ſhip after ſhip to that place, with troops on board, for ſome time paſt, for that very purpoſe, and that at the expreſs deſire of the Dutch patriots.

It is certainly true, that the French are making the greateſt preparations for war, in all their ports.

A letter from Havre de Grace, Sept. 28, ſays, "An expreſs from Verſailles came to the governor of this place laſt night, giving orders that none of the officers ſhould get leave to quit their regiments on any pretence whatever; and ſimilar ſteps are taken to get ſailors together."

Yeſterday about twelve o'clock, a meſſenger arrived at the Marquis of Carmarthen's office at Whitehall, expreſs from ſir James Harris at the Hague.

The contents of the diſpatches we underſtand are nearly as follows: The duke of Brunſwick, with a large army and a numerous train of artillery well ſerved, and the troops in high ſpirits, arrived at the very gates of Amſterdam on Thurſday laſt, and immediately ſent an herald ſummoning the city to ſurrender. From a delay of ſome hours, it was expected they meant to ſtand a ſiege; but at length they were agreeably ſurprized with an herald announcing a deputation, who arrived in the duke's camp the ſame evening, for the purpoſe of fixing on the terms of giving up the city and its dependencies. The terms were not mentioned, but they were expected to be ſettled by Friday night or Saturday at fartheſt, and the duke put in poſſeſſion. The duke's anſwer to the truce bearer, was that a ſhort time only would be allowed for ſurrender.

The duke immediately ſent a courier to the Hague: The circumſtance was announced to all the foreign ambaſſadors, who ſent off intelligence to their reſpective courts.

Extract of a letter from Amſterdam, Sept. 28.

"The city council, finding this place ſurrounded by the Pruſſian troops, who ſeemed diſpoſed to make an attack, propoſed to the grand council of war, of the armed burgeſſes, to demand a conference with the duke of Brunſwick. The duke agreed to this, and ſent the neceſſary paſſports for the four deputies from the city, two counſellors, a captain of the burgeſſes, and another. He alſo ſent a trumpet to propoſe a ceſſation of hoſtilities, until the conference was brought to an iſſue. This was accepted with pleaſure by the town: and the conference began on the 28th."

The ſurrender of Amſterdam may be expected very ſoon, if it has not taken place already. They muſt now be convinced, that they have no aſſiſtance to expect from France, and their internal ſtrength can never oppoſe ſuch an army as the duke of Brunſwick can ſend againſt the place.

Warrants have been iſſued for taking up all diſorderly perſons, vagrants, and ſuch as have no viſible means of gaining a livelihood, and preſſing them into his majeſty's land ſervice. Theſe warrants are to be backed in the city by the lord mayor and elſewhere by the proper magiſtrates.

Orders are ſent to the Carron Water Manufactory in Scotland, for immediate caſting a number of iron cannon for the uſe of the men of war.

October 4. Accounts from Vienna ſay, that the emperor has juſt iſſued a circular letter, commanding all the officers and ſoldiers belonging to the hereditary regiments, to repair immediately to their reſpective commands.

Advices from Prague ſay, that the utmoſt exertion is now uſing in repairing and augmenting the fortifications and works of that city, as an attack is expected by a large army of Turks, which is now collecting on the borders of Tranſylvania.

Extract of a letter from Cherburg, Sept. 29.

"Yeſterday an expreſs arrived from Paris, with orders to mount the guns on the batteries, as well as to mount the two king's ſhips that have been all the ſummer in the road, and to prepare for war, by obliging the people to work on the ſame."

Extract of a letter from St. Maloes, Sept. 29.

"An order is this moment arrived here to equip the following ſhips of war with all expedition: Le Hippolamme, of 64 guns; L'Hannibal, of 50, Le Saggittaire, Corneulle, Cabot, and Deſtin frigates, which are, as we expect, intended for a ſquadron of obſervation in the channel. Sailors are preparing to man them."

Nothing carries a greater appearance of war than the orders given by government for putting fire-ſhips into commiſſion, it being very unuſual to equip thoſe veſſels till the laſt moment of a fleet ſailing for actual ſervice.

The 17th, 43d, 44th, and 45th regiments have received orders from the war-office, to hold themſelves in readineſs for foreign ſervice.

Extract of a letter from Portſmouth, October 4.

"His majeſty's ſhips fitting out here go on with great rapidity, and begin to get a great number of hands on board, and ſeldom a day paſſes but we have a hundred or two from one place or another."

Juſt as this paper was going to preſs, Lloyd's Evening Poſt ſays, We have received the papers from Holland and Flanders, by which we learn, that the negociation between the duke of Brunſwick and the Amſterdam deputies, having failed of ſucceſs, the out poſts of the city of Amſterdam were on Monday laſt at three o'clock attacked by the Pruſſian troops; that about five the firing was very briſk, and continued ſo till ſeven, when the Pruſſian troops were repulſed in three different places, and retreated in great diſorder; that their loſs, however, as well as that of the Amſterdamers, was not known.

On Monday ſir Joſeph Yorke, with the picture of the ſtadtholder, pendant from an orange-coloured ribbon at his breaſt, having received ſome diſpatches from Holland, waited on the miniſter at the treaſury with the agreeable intelligence, that the diſputes in Holland were finally ſettled, and that their high mightineſſes had ſued for the prince to return to his uſual reſidence, and to take the command of the garriſon at the Hague, and accept of all his titles, dignities, and emoluments.

Humiliating, however, as theſe propoſals were, they were not to be accepted but on condition that the king of Pruſſia ſhould not evacuate the Dutch provinces till they conſented to reimburſe all the expences attending his taking the field, and the return of his army to his own territories, and that the command of his army and navy ſhould in future be ſolely veſted in the ſtadtholder.

The above ſubmiſſion has been made in conſequence of the court of Verſailles having formally notified to the ſtates their total inability to afford them the deſired protection and ſupport.

Theſe diſpatches further add, that when the expreſs came away, their mightineſſes were left deliberating on the propriety of reſcinding from their journals a former reſolution "of having at any time ſolicited the aſſiſtance of France."

Advices have been received of the Ruſſian ſquadron, conſiſting of 12 men of war, 8 of which are line of battle ſhips, having ſailed ten days ago; ſo that they may be expected in the channel in a few days and government have diſpatched pilots from Hull, to navigate them through the channel.

Friday ſome diſpatches were received from Liſbon, which were brought over in the Friendſhip, captain Walker, arrived at Portſmouth. They contain an account of the arrival of 20 ſail of ſhips from America and Newfoundland, and that 5 ſail of French men of war were arrived in the Tagus, and were at anchor; but where they were bound to was not known.

The admiralty arrangements are ſubject to variations, according to unforeſeen circumſtances; the following is the laſt altered liſt:

Admiral Pigot—Commander in chief of the Channel.

Admiral Barrington—Second in command.

Admiral Leviſon Gower—Third in command—vice admiral Milbanke, who was included in the arrangement lately ſpecified.

A fourth flag will be appointed, but the command is not yet aſcertained.

Admiral Edwards to command in the river Medway, at the Nore, and to hoiſt his flag on board the Sandwich, to which captain Tompkins is appointed.

Draughts are ordered to be made of ſuch men as are able, from Greenwich hoſpital, to aſſiſt in rigging and fitting out ſuch ſhips in the river as are ordered to be got ready for ſea.

We are informed, that a few days ago one of our frigates, which was ſtationed off Breſt, to watch the motions of the French, came up with a large tranſport, which the Engliſh captain hailed but to which the commander of the French ſhip paid no attention; on this the frigate ran along ſide of her, and boarded her; the Frenchman immediately threw her papers overboard. On examination, ſhe proved to be one of a fleet that had ſailed from Breſt the day before.

It is confidently ſaid, that M. de Bouille has ſailed for the Weſt-Indies in a ſingle ſhip, to take the command of the French troops.

Oct 4. On Saturday morning Mr. William Grenville ſet off to Paris with full power to endeavor to accommodate matters with that court, but not to return without a deciſive anſwer as to their future conduct; he carried in one hand the olive branch, and in the other a rod of iron and the two edged ſword.

The admiralty board, by directions of the cabinet, put ſeveral more ſhips into commiſſion, and diſpatched expreſſes to Portſmouth and Plymouth, for the immediate ſailing of the ſquadron, firſt for the protection of the homeward bound Eaſt-India fleet, of which there are yet 100 ſail at ſea; and next, to take their ſtation off the port of Breſt, to watch the motions of the French fleet.

Lord Howe, as preſident of the admiralty, has given in to the council an account of 17 ſhips of the line in commiſſion, and ready for ſea; and of 35 ſail of the line in the ordinaries with their ſea ſtores on board, and ready for being commiſſioned in 48 hours, of which number 11 are 3 deckers from 90 to 110 guns.

A fleet of 19 ſhips of the line is ordered to be fitted out with the utmoſt expedition, to be compoſed of two from Woolwich, viz. the Orion, the command of which is given to ſir Hyde Parker; and the Coloſſes: 2 in the Midway, viz. the Scipio and Rippin: the above 4 are to rendezvous in the Downs. Four from Plymouth are to go to Spithead. Six in Portſmouth harbour, ditto. Five are now at Spithead; they are all to be victualled for four months.

The maſter general of the ordinance on the ſame day gave notice to the corps of artillery to hold themſelves in readineſs at an hour for ſervice; and the victualling office received their inſtructions for the quantity of proviſions and ſupplies that might be wanted.

On Friday alſo the ſecretary at war, by his majeſty's commands, iſſued circular orders for an increaſe of the army, by the addition of two companies to each regiment, in order that each regiment ſhall, inſtead of 8, conſiſt of 10 companies.

In conſequence of advices being received on Friday by adminiſtration, of ſome hoſtile preparations and movements of the French, on account of the Pruſſian army having entered the ſtates, the lords of the admiralty, at nine o'clock in the evening, ſigned and iſſued preſs-warrants, which had been reſolved on in caſe of neceſſity by his majeſty in council on Wedneſday laſt. The warrants were delivered with the utmoſt ſecrecy, and at 1 o'clock on Saturday morning the preſs commenced, and continued very hot until 8 o'clock, on both ſides of the river; and by gallies up the river; the neceſſity for men was ſo urgent, that they ſtript every veſſel of all hands, except the captains, nor would any remonſtrance ſave either mates or apprentices. Before nine o'clock upwards of 2000 men were impreſſed, none of whom underwent the uſual form of being examined by a regulating captain, but were immediately carried down to Blackwall, where tenders were in readineſs to convey them to Chatham, to which place they ſet ſail with the morning tide.

Preſs-warrants took place at every port in the kingdom, and it is ſuppoſed that government have now got ready to put on board the different ſhips 10,000 ſeamen, and by the end of this week a well equipped fleet will be ready to put to ſea, if required.

Several additional houſes of rendezvous were opened on Saturday in Wapping, and its neighbourhood, and a ſharp look-out was obſerved by the different gangs of ſailors. At night the gangs were reinforced, and a few more hands were impreſſed. The preſs occaſioned ſuch a general alarm amongſt all thoſe who worked upon the river, that every boat and lighter, and every other veſſel, were totally deſerted, except by very old men, and all buſineſs is ſtopped on the river until protections can be got from the lords of the admiralty for a certain number of hands.

WAR OFFICE, Sept. 24.

It is his majeſty's pleaſure that all officers belonging to the regiments in Great Britain, or on foreign ſtations, do join their reſpective corps without delay, except ſuch officers as are employed on the recruiting ſervice.

GEO. YONGE.

WHITEHALL, Sept. 24.

It is his majeſty's pleaſure that all officers belonging to regiments of cavalry and infantry, now ſerving in Ireland, except ſuch as are employed on the recruiting ſervice, do join their reſpective corps without delay; and it his majeſty's further pleaſure, that all officers belonging to any of the garriſons in Ireland do repair to their reſpective poſts without delay.

SYDNEY.

ADMIRALTY OFFICE, Sept. 25.

My lords commiſſioners of the admiralty are hereby pleaſed to direct, that ſuch captains, commanders, and lieutenants of his majeſty's navy and marine forces, as are unemployed, do tranſmit hither an account of their places of abode, in order to their being ſent to when his majeſty's ſervice may require their attendance; and they are ſo to continue to do the ſame as often as they may happen to change their habitations.

P. STEPHENS.

Notice is hereby given to all officers of his majeſty's navy and marine forces, who are abſent from this kingdom with leave from my lords commiſſioners of the admiralty, that it is their lordſhips directions they return to England within 6 months after the date hereof; and that in failure thereof, they will forfeit all the half pay that may be due to them.

There is on this tract an excellent ſtone quarry within ſight of Pottſtown, two gardens incloſed with good ſtone walls.

The whole of the lands are of a good quality, and capable of great improvements. The greateſt part of what is cleared has been kept for paſture; and tho' ſeveral of the fields have been cleared theſe many years, they have not had more than one or two crops. The whole of the lands join each other.

LANDS FOR SALE

IN MARYLAND,

THE ſubſcriber has for ſale, all that TRACT of LAND called Beall's Plantation and Bateman's Field (being part of Snowden's Reputation Supported) containing from a late ſurvey 676 and a half acres, ſituate on the head of South river, Anne Arrundel county, about 3 miles from navigable water, 12 from the city of Annapolis, 28 from Baltimore town, 24 from George town, and about 7 from the Inſpection Houſes of Indian Landing and Queen Anne, is well adapted for corn, wheat, and particularly tobacco.

This Plantation has not been tenanted for 3 years is a moſt pleaſing and deſirable ſituation, and capable of great improvement at a ſmall expence: there are 259 acres of timber land, a greater part of which is very valuable. The ſubſcriber would prefer diſpoſing of the whole in one lot; but has no objection to making ſeveral of it: the timber land is conveniently ſituated for making ſuch diviſions in equal proportions, & there are many pleaſant ſituations for erecting different buildings; it is alſo well watered—A very good mill ſtream runs through it, and there is ſome meadow ground, and much more may be very readily made.

The improvements upon it are, a good dwelling houſe with three large rooms on each floor, kitchen, quarter, corn houſe, ſtables, tobacco houſe, and two very fine apple orchards, one of which contains 220 trees, together with a number of other valuable fruit trees.

A plan of this eſtate may be ſeen at Mr. Vachel Stevens, ſurveyor, Annapolis, who will ſhew the premiſes; alſo at Meſſ. William Patterſon & Brother's, Baltimore, and further information had. For price, terms, &c. apply to JOHN WADDINGTON.
